

E 14514

ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST

FIRST VOLUME

LONDON : PRINTED BY
SPOTTISWOODE AND CO., NEW-STREET SQUARE
AND PARLIAMENT STREET

Thos. Rowlandson

RAWAR SALAR JUNG SAHAJUR.

ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST

A SELECTION FROM HIS WORKS

WITH ANECDOTAL DESCRIPTIONS OF HIS FAMOUS CARICATURES

AND

A Sketch of his Life, Times, and Contemporaries

JOSEPH GREGO

AUTHOR OF 'JAMES GILLRAY, THE CARICATURIST; HIS LIFE, WORKS, AND TIMES'

LOCHMAS OF DUNDEE

JOHN CHARLES JAMES PCE

LORD NORTH

WITH ABOUT FOUR HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS

IN TWO VOLUMES—VOL. I.

London

CHATTO AND WINDUS, PICCADILLY

1880

[The right of translation is reserved]

DEDICATED

TO

ALL LOVERS OF HUMOUR

P R E F A C E.

'Tuâ nobis ■ gratiâ.'—CIC.

We have ■■■ of your favour.

THE EDITOR recognises ■■■ the admirers of Rowlandson's peculiar graphic productions, and ■■■ fortunate amateurs who ■■ able ■■ indulge their ■■■ in collecting caricatures ■■■ works embellished with humorous illustrations, will ■■■ expect any excuse for the preparation and appearance of the present work : he anticipates that—in spite of much ■■■ he would improve—the ■■■ volumes devoted ■■ a ■■■ of the great Caricaturist, with the multifarious, ludicrous, and grotesque creations which emanated from ■■■ fertile fancy, will ■■ accepted ■■ in some degree, supplying that which, without being absolutely indispensable, ■■■ frequently been instanced as ■■ compilation likely ■■ be acceptable ■■ the appreciators of graphic and literal satire.

To ■■■ initiated few this sketch of a famous delineator of whimsicalities, ■■■ the review of ■■■ works, times, and contemporaries, ■■ offered ■■■ the ■■■ conviction that the intentions of the Author ■■■ ■■■ liable to be misconstrued by them ; nor has he any grounds to dread that the subjects represented ■■■ the risk of being questioned at their hands on ■■■ grounds of propriety.

Fuller consideration is due ■■ the many ■■ whom the ■■■ of Rowlandson conveys ■■ more than a perception of 'oddity' or of license of treatment ■■■ approaches vulgarity, ■■ whom the innumerable inventions of the artist represent foreign ground—a novel, strange land, populated with daring absurdities, according ■■ their theories.

■ ■ felt that ■■■ justification is needed for the writer's temerity ■■ volunteering ■ a pioneer ■ conduct the unsophisticated through ■ devious and eccentric ■ which characterise ■ progress of pictorial satire, ■ demonstrated in the subject of the work now submitted ■ the public with all due deference.

The neophyte, it ■ anticipated, ■ be somewhat startled at the ■ glance of ■ surroundings amidst which he ■ wander ; but it ■ believed that, in the course of his journey through ■ anomalous past, he will alight on discoveries, more ■ interesting in themselves, which provide abundant food for the student of humanity.

The writer deprecates ■ hasty conclusion, ■ the ■ that those who have the moderation ■ their opinions until they have fully acquainted themselves with the materials, may possibly suffer their critical instincts ■ modified in the process.

We have taken the liberty of scrutinising somewhat closely—with a view ■ the portrayal of its salient features—a generation which ■ marked with ■ colouring ■ intensified than those who live in ■ time are prepared to adopt. Of ■ diversified with much which ■ been discarded, ■ accept Rowlandson ■ the fitting exponent. His works epitomise a state of being comparatively ■ in actual fact, but, from the circumstances of change, ■ distantly removed in appearance, as to constitute ■ curious experience ■ the majority.

With every qualification ■ ensure success, Rowlandson, ■ his story indicates, deliberately threw away the serious chances of life, ■ settle down as the delineator of ■ transitory impressions of the hour. 'There is wisdom in laughter,' ■ the sage ; and—without precisely regarding life ■ a 'stale jest'—our artist drew mirth from every situation, and illustrated from ■ own fecund ■ that, while nearly every circumstance has its grotesque ■ well ■ ■ sinister aspect, the ludicrous elements of any given ■ often ■ enduring than ■ serious ■

Good-natured pleasantry, we may remind the reader, ■ held ■ be 'whole- ■ Rowlandson's shafts, ■ far as our judgment serves, were never pointed with gall : ■ he possessed the faculty of seizing the weak or ridiculous side of his subject, he ■ unlike Gillray, ■ best-known contemporary, ■ have been an utter stranger ■ acrimonious instigations. A fuller acquaintanceship reveals the Caricaturist—as ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ day—‘an inexhaustible ■ ■ ■ of amusement, every ■ ■ ■ of which was replete ■ ■ ■ fun’—perhaps the ■ ■ ■ genial travelling companion who could be selected in traversing the ways of life led by our ancestors, for the half-century ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ witnessed the gradual extinction of the quaint, old-fashioned Georgian ■ ■ ■ and inaugurated the ■ ■ ■ picturesque generation ■ ■ ■ which ■ ■ ■ immediate predecessors belong.

■ ■ ■ recorded, concerning the part played in the world by the satirists, pictorial ■ ■ ■ literal—‘the ■ ■ ■ they deserve, the more merit in your bounty.’ We would modestly suggest the sapient axiom embodied by the great master, ‘Fancy’s favourite child,’ relative ■ ■ ■ the transient jesters whose lot ■ ■ ■ has been ‘to hold, as ’t were, the mirror up to nature’ upon the mimic stage: ‘Let them be well used; for they are the abstracts and brief chronicles of the time: after your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live.’

wall, Devon, Somerset, Norfolk, Suffolk, Kent, Hampshire, &c.—Studies in the Universities: views of the Colleges of Oxford and Cambridge—Malcolm's 'Historical Sketch of the Art of Caricaturing'—Wright's 'History of Caricature and Grotesque in Literature and Art'—Rowlandson as an etcher of the works of amateur caricaturists: his own spirit lent to the productions of Wigstead, Nixon, Woodward, Bunbury, Collings, &c.—Sketches of contemporary caricaturists: William Henry Bunbury, George Woodward, Henry Wigstead, the facetious John Club—The 'well-bread man'—Collings, artist and of the 'Ledger'—Caleb Whiteford—'Ephraim Hardcastle'—James Heath—George Morland—James Gillray—Allusions to Rowlandson in the 'Life of James Gillray, the Caricaturist, with the Story of his Works and Times'—The position of caricaturists in relation to their contemporaries—Henry Angelo, the fencing master—Personal characteristics of satirists—Rowlandson's publisher, Rudolph Ackermann: sketch of his life—'Conversations' at the 'Repository of Arts'—Special qualities of Rowlandson's productions—Esteem in which he was held by contemporaries—His death and funeral 1774-1781.

EARLY

Rotation Office—The Village Doctor—A Scene at Streatham—Bossy and Plom—Special Pleading—The Power of Reflection—E O, or the Fashionable Vowels—Gambling Tables—Charity Covereth a Multitude of Sins—Bob Derry—Luxury—Political social caricatures for 1781

96

1782-1783.

Amputation—The Rhedarium—The Discovery—Interior of a Clockmaker's Shop—The Times—Political and social caricatures for 1783

107

1784

POLITICAL CARICATURES.

Pit of Acheron—The of Dagon—The Coalition—Fox—Roused—The Company—The Apostate Jack Robinson—The Champion of the People—Billy's Procession—Grocers' Hall—The Auction—The Election—The British Lion—The Canvass—The Duchesses—The Rival dates: James Fox, Lord Hood, Sir Gray—The Devonshire, or most Approved Securing Votes—The Poll—Fox, Westminster Watchman—Honest House—of the Bedchamber—The Court Canvass of Blubber—Wit's Last Stake, or the Cobbling Voter and Abject Canvassers—Monsieur Reynard—The Case is Altered—The Hustings—Procession of the Hustings after a Successful Canvass—Lord Lonsdale—The Westminster Mendicant—The Westminster Deserter Drumm'd out of the Regiment—Court Influence—Preceptor and Pupil—Secret Directing the New Parliament—For the of the Champion—Petitioning Candidate—Christopher Atkinson, a 'Rogue in Grain'—John Stockdale, 'Bookselling'

111

SOCIAL CARICATURES.

Sketch from Nature—English Curiosity—Counsellor and Client—La Françoise—1784, the of the Day—The Vicar and Moses—Money-lenders—Bookseller and Author—The Animating of a Young Painter—Billingsgate—Illustrations of Conveyances—Rowlandson's imitations of modern drawings

1785.

	PAGE
The Fall of Achilles—The Golden Apple, or the Modern Paris—Defeat of the English and Mighty Balissimo Corbettino and his Famed Cecilian Forces—The Wonderful Pig—The Waterfall—Comfort in the Gout—VAUXHALL GARDENS: Vauxhall Characters—Vincent Lamardi: Astrostation Out at Elbows, or the Itinerant Astronaut—Too Many for a Jew—An Essay on the Sublime and Beautiful—The Maiden Speech—Captain Epilogue—Col. Topham Endeavouring with his Squirt to Extinguish the Genius of Holman—Persons and Property Protected by Authority—Intrusion on Study, or the Painter Disturbed—Courtship—Filial Affection, or a Trip to Gretna Green—The Reconciliation, or the Return from Scotland—Lord Eden and Gen. Arnold—Harmony—Sympathy—John Gilpin—Tastes Differ—Nap in Country—Nap in Town—Sea Amusement, the Commander-in-Chief of Cup in the the Cruise—Opera Boxes	152

1786.

the Lobby Loungers—Love in Learning—Sketch in Politics in Europe, January 1786—Uncle Toby (the Duke in Richmond)—An in Dream, in Planning Fortifications—Luxury—Misery— the Morning Dram—Count in (the in Dwarf) Performing before the in Seigneur—Brewers' Drays—Youth and Age—Sailors Carousing—A in Chymist—The in from Sport—A Box Lobby Hero—Wester—Covent Garden Theatre—Illustrations in the poems of 'Peter Pindar' (Dr. Wolcot)—'Picturesque Beauties of Boswell'	158
--	-----

1787.

the George and the Dick—Illustration in the in 'The Lousiad,' 'Peter's Pension,' 'Odes in the Year'—The Triumph of Sentiment—The Triumph of Hypocrisy—Transplanting of in (Baron Ron)—The Village Forge—A Brewer's Dray—A Posting Inn—A in Halt—Haymakers—A in Family—A College Scene, or a Fruitless Attempt in the Pursue of Old Squaretoes—Tragedy Spectators—Comedy Spectators—Love in the East—The Art of Scaling—Modish—Prudent—Cribbage Players	199
---	-----

1788.

Hunting Series—The Meet—The Humours of St. Giles's—Warren Hastings—Ague in Fever—Lord Hood—The in Scandal—The King's in Piety—The Prospect in us—The Regency Struggle—The Restrictions—The Addresses—The Word-Eater—Blue in Loyalty—Housebreakers—Love in Dust—Luxury in Desire—Lust in Avarice—Stage Coach and Basket—An Epicure—A in Nap in Post-chaise—A Fencing Match—The Pea-Cart—A Print Sale.	223
--	-----

1789.

The Regency Restrictions—The in Egbert, or the King of Kings—The Pitfall—The Propagation in a Truth—Loose Principles—State Butchers—A New Speaker—Britannia's Support, in in Conspirators Defeated—Going in in House of Peers—A Sweating in Opposition—Irish Ambassadors Extraordinary—Address from the Parliament of Ireland to the Prince of Wales—The Prince's Answer—The King's Recovery—Irish Ambassador's Return—Rochester Address— in in Paul's in in George's Day, 1798—Sergeant in (Duke in Orleans) in cruising at Billingsgate—Grog in Board—Tea in Shore—Interruption, in Inconvenience of a Lodging House—A in in Decency—The Start—The Betting Post—The Course—The Mount—Bay in Biscay—Chelsea Reach—La Place in Victoires, Paris—A Dull in	242
---	-----

1790.

	PAGE
Tythe-Pig—A [redacted] Ian—Frog-Hunting—A Butcher—Repeal of the [redacted] Act—A French Family —Kick-up at a Hazard Table—Who Tells First for a Crown—Philip Thicknesse—'An [redacted] [redacted] Brighthelmstonc, made in [redacted] 1789'—Saloon at the Pavilion, Brighton—Waiting [redacted] —At Dinner—After Dinner—Preparing for Supper—Four [redacted] in Town—Four [redacted] Country—Fox-Hunters Relaxing—John Nichols—Miniature groups and [redacted]

1791.

The Pantheon—The Prospect before us, Nos. 1 and 2—Chaos is Come Again—Sheets of picturesque etchings—The Attack—Bardolph Badgered—An Imperial Stride—The [redacted] [redacted] between the Famous English [redacted] [redacted] [redacted] Hen—A [redacted] Tighter—A [redacted] Bigger—Damp Sheets— English Barracks—French Barracks—Shags in a Sawpit—The Prince's jockey, Chiffney—How [redacted] Escape Winning—How to Escape Losing—Angelo's Fencing Rooms—Notorious Fencers—The Inn-yard on Fire—A Squall in Hyde Park—Illustrations [redacted] Fielding's 'Tom Jones'—Smollett's 'Adventures of Peregrine Pickle'—'Délices de la Grande Bretagne'	283
--	-----

1792.

St. James's and St. Giles's—Work for Doctors' Commons—Six Stages of Marring a Face—Six Stages of Mending a Face—Ruins of the Pantheon—Hogarthian Novelist: 'Adventures of Roderick Random'—Philosophy Run Mad—On [redacted] [redacted] Legs—Studios Gluttons—Cold Broth and Calamity—An Italian Family—The Hypochondriac—Benevolence—The Contrast: which is Best? British Liberty, or French Liberty?	306
---	-----

1793.

Reform Advised: Reform Begun: Reform Complete—New Shoes—Illustrations to Smollett's novels —Illustrations [redacted] a 'Narrative of the War'—Illustrations [redacted] Fielding's novels	319
---	-----

1794.

The Grandpapa—The Foreigner Stared out of Countenance—Traffic—The Invasion Scare: Village Cavalry Practising in a Farmyard—A Visit to [redacted] Uncle—A Visit to [redacted] Aunt—Bad News [redacted] the Stock Exchange	321
--	-----

1795.

Harmony: [redacted] [redacted] Harmony: Discord—A Master of [redacted] Ceremonies Introducing a Partner	326
---	-----

1796.

[redacted] Alan Gardiner—Portraits—An Impartial Narrative of [redacted] War	327
---	-----

1797.

Theatrical Candidates—Views [redacted] [redacted] Netherlands—'Tiens bien ton Bonnet, [redacted] toi, [redacted] [redacted] Queue' —Cupid's Magic [redacted]
---	--

1798.

PAGE

The Hunt Dinner—Illustrations to the 'Comforts of Bath,' in twelve plates—The New Bath Guide, or of the Family; in a series of poetical epistles, by Christopher Anstey—
 London—The Invasion Panic: Recruiting—The Hungarian Highland Exercise—The Glorious Victory obtained over the French Fleet off the Nile, August 1, 1798, by the gallant Admiral Lord Nelson of the Nile—High Fun for John Bull, or the Republicans put to their Last Shift—The Discovery—'Annals of Horsemanship'—The Academy for Grown Horsemen—'Love in Caricature' III

1799.

Cries of London—A Democracy—An Travelling in Wales—Nautical Characters —An howl—Etchings after old masters—St. Giles's Courtship—St. James's Courtship—Connoisseurs—Horse Accomplishments—Comforts of the City—Procession Country Corporation—Forget Forgive—A of Hand—Legerdemain—A Bankrupt Cart, Road Ruin in East—Subjects engraved after designs by Bunbury—Distress—Hungarian and High-Exercise—Loyal Volunteers of London Environs 354

ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST.

BUYERS and readers of books, all admirers of pictures, drawings, and engravings—in a word, the intelligent, and, let me hope, larger proportion of the community—are well aware, if they are inclined to search for information in respect to the celebrities of art, or would inquire into the personal careers of the renowned pioneers and practitioners of the serious branches of the profession, of whatever period, school, or nationality, that numerous sources of reference, tolerably easy of access, are open to the seeker without being driven far abroad in his quest.

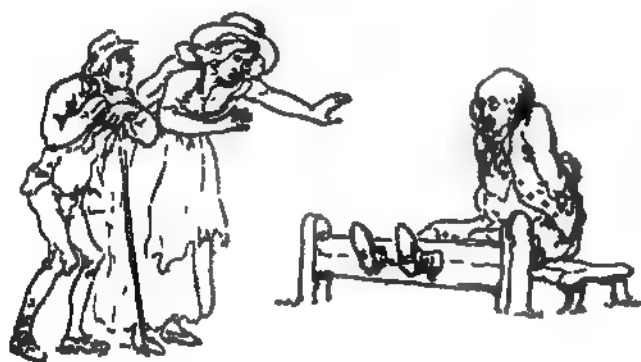

There exist, as we are all thoroughly aware, abundant lives of artists, dictionaries of painters, and other prolific sources of information upon the practisers of the sober walks of pictorial art, with rich collections of engravings from their works, in fact, a complete library of delightful literature, which goes far towards proving that the world at least acknowledges a slight interest in individuals as well as works, and that people learn particulars of the men who spent their industrious existences, and devoted the gifts of their admitted genius and application to the humanising walks of life, and the fitting illustration of the world's universal passions and history, or to the delineation of the ever-varying beauties of nature under picturesque aspects.

Wealthy collectors, the cultivated patrons of material refinement, frequenters of picture galleries, those who love pictures by instinct, art amateurs, and the hopeful and fervent student, have alike a provision prepared for them in this regard, which happily leaves little to be desired. The memoirs of artists—men whose domestic and inner lives in so many instances teach lessons of gentleness, simplicity, and singleness of purpose, of perseverance under difficulties; making manifest to a world which is often slow to give them credit for the gifts that are in them, the strong impulses of talent under untoward conditions—are, for the most part, tender memorials, labours of love, cherished productions of biographers, whose natural qualifications and trained appreciation of the subtler attractions of art have brought them into intimate communion with the memorable subjects of their studies.

ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST

It has ever been a of regret to the writer, since his youthful fancies first won by the marvels of grotesque art, and the pleasant creations of the graphic humourists, that while the names of the designers, familiarly known as caricaturists—who have enriched the more playful branches of the profession—household words, fitting memorials be found of the of these draughtsmen of true genius; they knew their generation, is instanced in the inexhaustible memorials they have bequeathed their descendants in their works, and while they themselves thoroughly familiar with the varied aspects and workings of the social life with which they surrounded, their generation knew them not, and took no care to preserve any record of the capricious wits whose pleasant inventions had often afforded them enjoyment. The humourists, who did so much to contribute towards the amusement of others, have been suffered to pass away, in too many cases, as impersonalities. The works of their fanciful and fertile imaginations have been accepted on all hands and allotted their recognised position among the other agreeable accessories of life, while the gifted professors have, with or two notable exceptions, which make the reverse the more marked, been pretty generally passed over. If they are thought of at all under the relationship of realistic characters, as mythical beings, less tangible—as regards their connection with the living people of their generations, of whose persons, habits, and follies they have bequeathed animated instances to posterity—than the most weird and fantastic creations of their pencils or etching-points, emanations of the mind, whose utmost substance amounts paper, and printing-ink, and ideas.

The whimsical conceptions which owe their origin Gillray, Rowlandson, Bunbury, Ramberg, Woodward, Dighton, Nixon, Newton, Boyne, Collings, Kingsbury, Isaac Cruikshank, his son, 'the glorious George,' the veteran caligraphist, who has just passed away of years and reputation, Lane, Heath, Seymour, and bevy of their contemporaries, in their day tolerably familiar, their etchings and sketches were in the hands of the print-buying public of the period, and they enjoy, as far as these relics of the past are concerned, a posthumous reputation which varies according to the merits of their productions, a generation after another having assigned them their just relative positions on the ladder of fame; all the inimitable amusing travesties which reproduce the manners, and the sentiments of past celebrities and perished generations, owe their creation to artists who suffered to labour in partial obscurity; while the creatures of their brains were in the hands of every one, their contemporaries, for the most part, did not trouble themselves sufficiently to reflect whether the designers had any real existence, possibly classing the actual, practical, living, and working under the category of abstract ideas in their minds, impalpable atomies, less substantial than their tangible satirical pictures, which enjoyed a popular circulation.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE LITERATURE OF CARICATURE.

The late Thomas Wright, F.S.A. (with the collaboration of an earnest worker in the field, the late F. W. Fairholt, F.S.A., who contributed the valuable aid of his pencil), has done a great deal for the subject in his 'History of the Grotesque in Literature and Art,' and still in his 'Caricature History of the Three Georges.' 'The Caricature History of the Fourth George,' which offers a still wider field of selection, as regards political and pictorial squibs and satires, has yet to appear.

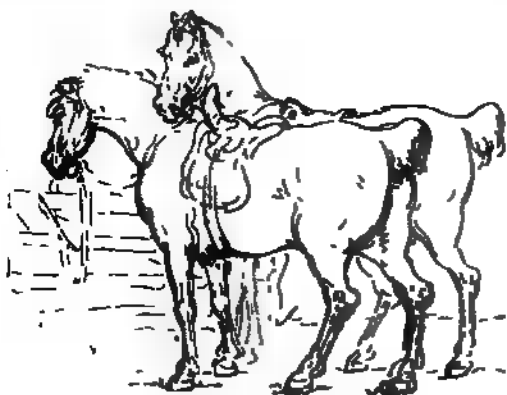

A preliminary contribution to the history of caricature, an attempt to repair in some measure the oversight of indifferent contemporaries, 'The Works of James Gillray the Caricaturist, with the Story of his Life and Times,' published under the auspices of Messrs. Chatto and Windus, has already met with a favourable reception at the hands of the press and the public; the present writer devoted several years to the completion of the volume, with the solitary end in view of associating the artist intimately with his works, in the estimation of the public, before it was too late. Mr. Thomas Wright, an indefatigable pioneer in a comparatively unbeaten track, deserved personal recognition for the strength of his important contributions, bearing on the political history of the House of Hanover, duly set forth in the present writer's introduction, and his name offered such repute as was conferred by the editorship.

The writer, from his gleanings in the same direction, has been able to offer the public a sketch of the 'Life of Henry Bunbury the Caricaturist,' with slighter

ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST.

croquis of his contemporaries. During the interval since the first intention of compiling the present volume ■ a further contribution to the literature of caricature assumed ■ definite form, ■■■ years back, the preparation of the work, imperfect and incomplete ■ it confessedly must remain—a ■■■ ébauche at best—has been proceeding by slow and toilsome stages, the self-imposed task being rendered a more difficult one than in the instance of James Gillray,¹ from the disheartening circumstance that it is utterly impossible ■ arrive at anything approaching a comprehensive view of the works of Rowlandson ; ■ adequate collection being in existence, as far ■ the writer has discovered, with the possible exception of an accumulation in the hands of Mr. Harvey of St. James's Street, the advantages of which gathering (it has been going ■ steadily for years) have hitherto remained inaccessible to the editor, the possessor's time having been too occupied by the requirements of his other engagements ■ permit him to arrange the prints as he wishes. This circumstance is to be regretted, since Mr. Harvey admits the personal interest he feels in caricature, upon which, when communicatively inclined, he is able to furnish very valuable information, in part the results of his ■■■ wide experience as a purchaser, and still more, perhaps, of painstaking investigations conducted for his private delcctation ; as his position and opportunities enable him to gratify his tastes in this direction to the fullest extent, it is hinted that ■ occasions he may feel disposed ■ furnish the critic with certain valuable facts of ■ special nature, drawn from the results of his own practical investigations in directions not generally available. This gentleman is, undoubtedly, ■ authority, and as, it is believed, he possesses unrivalled opportunities for forming ■ unique collection of prints by any master whose works he may fancy, the writer has, from season to ■■■ for the past six years, deferred the completion of his volume on the faith of a generous-sounding promise that he should be allowed to consult Mr. Harvey's collection of prints by Rowlandson, which, according to his knowledge, must be both interesting and valuable, and may possibly contain ■ great deal that has escaped his previous researches, however zealously they may have been instituted.

The sacrifice of time, labour, and patience involved in attempting to compile ¹ The preparation of The Works of James Gillray, the Caricaturist, ■■■ ■ Story of his Life and Times (376 pp. quarto), ■ in itself ■ bagatelle ; ■ three working years of steady application were invested in its ■ and illustrations.

NATIONAL COLLECTIONS.

anything approaching a fairly compendious summary of Rowlandson's etchings is simply incredible. The desire to furnish a complete catalogue, though seemingly reasonable in itself at the first glance, is discovered upon experience to be practically impossible, and hence out of the question as regards arrangement; the productions of the artist, multiplied by pen, graver, and etching-point, and supplied by the hand of the master, or reproduced by other engravers, are legion, and where these examples are scattered no amount of application can adequately ascertain.

As far as kindly assistance is concerned, the writer has to acknowledge, with sincere gratitude, that where his previous experience has taught him to anticipate courtesies, he has been gratified in the highest degree, and he is proud to record that he ~~now~~ finds himself indebted for cordial sympathy to the best qualified experts of the day.

Mr. G. W. Reid,¹ the respected keeper of the prints and drawings in the British Museum, with Messrs. Fagan and Donaghue, urbane members of his staff, have at all times made his ~~office~~ easy to the invaluable collection of social and political caricatures in his department; Mr. George Bullen (whose affability and scholarly acquirements are proverbial), the respected keeper of the printed books in the same magnificent national institution, has been able to facilitate the writer's quest of illustrations and caricatures by Rowlandson, in far as they come within the scope of the important department which that gentleman efficiently administers; the obliging and accomplished custodian of the superb collection belonging to the Bibliothèque Nationale of France has most readily allowed the writer to avail himself of the select and valuable gathering of caricatures by Rowlandson, which are to be found under his charge. It must be mentioned that the caricature resources of the royal collection in the museum at Brussels are as courteously placed at his service by the well-informed custodian, who, it may be added, takes a considerable individual interest in this branch as illustrative of ~~the~~ and ~~the~~ under special aspects. The writer has pursued his perquisitions in far as the national state collection of engravings contained in the Trippenhuizen Museum, Amsterdam. These magnificent national institutions are all, more or less, rich in caricatures of an historical description, but unfortunately, as regards the [redacted] of the present undertaking, the works of Rowlandson, [redacted] as they are, happen [redacted] be the reverse of the strong features of their collections of satirical prints, either political [redacted] social. The writer has accordingly been thrown back, [redacted] a dispiriting extent, on his own necessarily restricted resources; and the [redacted] illustrations which accompany this volume are for the [redacted] part unavoidably drawn from his [redacted] folios.

¹ The Editor, among other special subjects, of a descriptive catalogue of the works of George Cruikshank. 2 volumes quarto. Published by ~~the~~ and Sons, 1871. (Only 130 copies printed.)

ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST.

The principal [redacted] from whence it was hoped the best information could be detached proved utterly and exceptionally valueless; the writer refers to the important publishing establishments (and the [redacted] who carry [redacted] the firms at the present day), whence the far-famed caricatures [redacted] originally issued. The firms of the Humphries, Hollands, Jackson, J. R. Smith, and others under whose auspices the artist's earliest, and in several instances most finished and ambitious works, first secured their lasting reputation, have long become extinct, as far as the editor is informed. But three leading print-publishing houses, established by Rowlandson's principal patrons, to whom the publication of the major part of his works [redacted] due, are still flourishing, under conditions modified to harmonise with the requirements of the present age, by descendants and successors of the well-known founders. These resources have proved, however, [redacted] disappointing failure, as far as assistance towards the compilation of a catalogue of the artist's productions is concerned. To Mr. Rudolph Ackermann, the respected inaugurator of the 'Repository of Arts,' a truly liberal and enterprising gentleman, who will be referred to at greater length in the course of this volume, Rowlandson (with many other professional artists and authors) [redacted] deeply indebted both for business-like co-operation, for the pains he took to sell the artist's countless original drawings, for personal encouragement, untiring friendship, and pecuniary accommodation. Messrs. Ackermann have unfortunately preserved [redacted] account of the [redacted] publications due [redacted] the hand of the caricaturist, and issued for half-a-century by their respected firm, [redacted] have they any collection of impressions from the plates they gave to the public.

The same observation applies to Mr. William Tegg, whose father, the indefatigable and well-known Thomas Tegg of Cheapside, published hundreds of the satirist's later and cruder caricatures, which [redacted] more generally familiar in the windows of printsellers, &c., since copies [redacted] multiplied to [redacted] larger extent than [redacted] practicable in the [redacted] of delicately finished aquatints, which gave fewer impressions, and commanded higher prices. Consequently, Rowlandson [redacted] better known [redacted] the public by his least desirable prints, and under his most common-place aspect. Mr. S. W. Fores [redacted] to have issued an important proportion of Rowlandson's larger and more valuable plates, with the addition of an immense number of small subjects etched by Rowlandson, and finished by clever aquatinters, published in a ■■■■ costly form than ■■■■ generally the custom of the time. The successors of this gentleman have mentioned that the firm has ■■■■ preserved any list of the publications issued under its original and well-recognised standing, in respect to satirical production, ■■■■ Fores' Caricature Museum, but it is understood that, at the present writing, there still remains in the house ■■■■ collection, in huge volumes, of early impressions from the multitudinous plates issued from the establishment under its earlier auspices—a publisher's summary, in short, such as, it is to be regretted, is rarely preserved for any length of time. Unfortunately, owing to the exigencies of their modern print business, the writer has not been permitted to consult this highly interesting collection; he has, however, been informed, as an equivocal sort of consolation for his discomfiture, by the member of the firm to whom his application was addressed, that the major part of the prints, as far as the works of Rowlandson are concerned, ■■■■ of a political character, and that the interesting and valuable social engravings are wanting; he also learns that nothing of importance by Rowlandson is to be found in this collection.

RESOURCES OF PRINT PUBLISHERS.

It is worthy of note, that the majority of the caricatures described in the present work, ■■■■ published by S. W. Fores, belong almost entirely to the more attractive order of social satires, and pictorial skits at home and abroad, or cartoons levelled at the leaders of fashion, holding up the prevalent follies of the hour to legitimate ridicule. The writer confesses that he is inclined to feel ■■■■ deeper regret at his inability to describe these political prints, presuming his informant, who certainly ought ■■■■ know, is correct in this conclusion, since he is unable to account for their existence, as amongst the immense number of caricatures published by S. W. Fores, he has not hitherto lighted upon the series in question. Rowlandson's political prints—which, as the reader will realise in the progress of this compilation, are numerous enough in all conscience—were mostly published, as regards the early examples, by Humphries (a few of the somewhat hackneyed Westminster Election set, 1784, were due to S. W. Fores, it is acknowledged); while his later productions in this field, such ■■■■ the succession of plates attacking Buonaparte, ■■■■ issued from Ackermann's Repository of Arts, ■■■■ circulated by Thomas Tegg (like the series treating of that Delicate Investigation, the Clarke scandal), according to the circumstances of the artist's employment or the cost of the plates. Popular prices being a requisition in the [] of the [] published from the City, a coarser method of execution, with unmistakable instances of haste, detract in [] unqualified degree from the interest of these prints, [] instances of the artist's ability, which is exhibited [] greater advantage in productions where his skill [] allowed [] more liberal exercise, as is evidenced in the capitally executed plates published by the West End print-selling firms.

The hopeful chances of aid from fountain-heads, upon experience, diminished [] zero; and, while obstacles multiplied, the writer found it necessary to redouble his energy. As it proved that his own collection must, in the end, serve [] the main [] of reliance, fresh efforts [] made to increase his gathering, and valuable additions [] gradually secured. The process was somewhat tedious and costly withal, but it [] the only [] left open, unless the intention [] renounced after the work had been advertised in progress.

Print-sellers' shops, at home and abroad, were ransacked, and auctions of engravings [] attended, whenever the alluring word caricatures occurred in the catalogue. The supply [] remarkably limited, the demand considerable and increasing; and prices, from the nature of the request, shortly became unreasonable. Choice caricatures, [] those in fairly good condition, were pushed up to nearly the prices of the original drawings, and even [] these enhanced rates but few examples [] forthcoming. In Paris, Brussels, and London, [] five-pound note became about [] fair equivalent for a moderately fine impression after Rowlandson, if the plate were large and the subject important or curious, while for certain of the [] sought-after examples, this rate was doubled; for such plates as Vauxhall Gardens, dealers expect a still larger price—indeed, five-and-twenty pounds have been demanded in many instances. The chances of fresh examples by Rowlandson coming into the market have decreased, and possibly the competition will relax when there is no longer a chance of exciting it.

The writer has necessarily made the acquaintance of several gentlemen who [] fervent collectors of Rowlandson's works, and he by [] means ignores his obligations to those happy possessors of [] specimens, who have frequently carried them off with [] air of conquest from discomfited rival amateurs, the condition of their purses, and the artistic enthusiasm aroused at the moment, rendering similar triumphs comparatively facile, when incidental questions as ■ actual worth ■ ■ ■ insignificant to engage the attention.

DIFFICULTIES OF FORMING A COLLECTION.

Certain collectors of eminence, who are discriminating selectors of caricatures, well qualified ■ judge of their technical merits, and who, further, ■ ■ well posted up in curious and-out-of-the-way points of the political and social histories of the times thus illustrated, have volunteered the results of their researches; these good-natured offers have arrived too late to be available, but the writer is not the less indebted to the kindness which prompted the action; in ■ earlier and preparatory stage, these advances would have been of considerable value and assistance.

So much for the materials; perhaps too much ■ ■ ■ has been laid, ■ far ■ the reader's patience is concerned, ■ the preliminary difficulties which have hindered and weakened the execution of the writer's desire ■ reproduce, by pencil and pen, ■ fair gathering of the works of ■ ■ greatest humorous designers, ■ idea long cherished, and tardily carried out, as regards the first part of his task, James Gillray; and beset, ■ he has recounted, in respect to THOMAS ROWLANDSON, the concluding portion, by unforeseen impediments and technical difficulties which it would be tedious to enumerate; they may, however, in ■ minor degree, be taken into consideration as a plea for the obvious shortcomings of this laborious compilation, and, while inclining rigid specialists ■ be less exacting, induce critics to regard the unavoidable faults of the performance with lenient forbearance.

For the space of ■ century, Rowlandson's caricatures, which are more properly croquis of the life which surrounded him, have continued to afford delight to the appreciators of graphic humour, from the date, 1775, when he sent his first contribution to the Royal Academy. It was only this year (1878) that a pair of his remarkably spirited drawings, Faro Table at Devonshire House, and A Gaming Table, attracted considerable praise and attention on the walls of the Grosvenor Gallery. Although the artist ■ ■ master of the most elegant refinement, both of delineation and colouring, and produced the most delicious female heads with that lightness and daintiness of touch which ■■■ his peculiar gift, bringing all the graces, sparkle and animation of the French school to bear upon the models of winsome female beauty ■■■ own favoured isles produced for the exercise of his pencil, ■■■ constrained ■■ admit, thus early in our summary, that too many of his productions ■■ strongly tinged by that coarseness of subject and sentiment which has been held to disfigure the works of contemporary humorists; his wit, it must be remembered, was of the jocose school of Smollett and Fielding, and in justice it must be taken into consideration that his designs, even in their most uncompromising and grosser aspects, simply reflect the colour of ■ period which ■■■ the ■■■■ of squeamish, and, ■■ has been pertinently observed by the late Thomas Wright, 'of ■ generation celebrated for anything rather than delicacy.'

The artist ■■■ pretty generally recognised ■ the famous illustrator of Doctor Syntax and The Dance of Death, and in this relation he is fairly acknowledged by posterity; this limited view, ■ the present volume is designed to demonstrate, being far indeed from ■ adequate acknowledgment of his proper artistic standing. Rowlandson's higher qualifications, ■ ■ draughtsman in water - colours of remarkable merit, a portrait-painter of felicitous promise, and the originator of countless witty and pointed conceptions, ■■■ discovered more tardily. His surprising facility for representing the human figure, with knowledge and freedom of execution, his marvellous power of combining groups and crowds of figures in active movement, his grasp of expression, and fluency of colour and handling, ■■■ particularly admitted (though in ■ sense they have since been lost sight of) after the Exhibition of 1862, where two of his truly characteristic subjects, of considerable size, made their appearance ■ the walls, to the ■■■■ ment and delight of the spectators, who had ■ previous acquaintance with his whimsical genius. These two drawings, which opened the eyes of the world ■ his gifts for ■ little season, ■■ entitled An English Review and A French Review; they originally formed ■ very noticeable feature on the walls of the Royal Academy in 1786; it ■ believed that eventually they ■■■ into the possession of the Prince of Wales, and, with the rest of George IV.'s collection, have remained in keeping of the royal family ever since, her gracious Majesty, the Queen, being pleased to lend them, with other fine representative examples of art, ■ the Exhibition Commissioners of 1862.

The English Review, and its companion drawing, ■ French Review, hang at Windsor Castle, where ■ ■ informed there is ■ very large accumulation of caricatures, drawings and prints, put away in ■ closet, in the order of their appearance; which, it is likely, have remained undisturbed for generations. It is ■ impossible that, hidden away in this mass of satirical productions, may be found the series of drawings, notoriously of a free tendency ■ regards subject, which Rowlandson is understood to have produced for the delectation of George IV. A collection of a similar description was, ■ ■ learn from the ■ ■ authority, destroyed by ■ nobleman well known for his princely liberality, on the death of the patron who had selected the subjects.

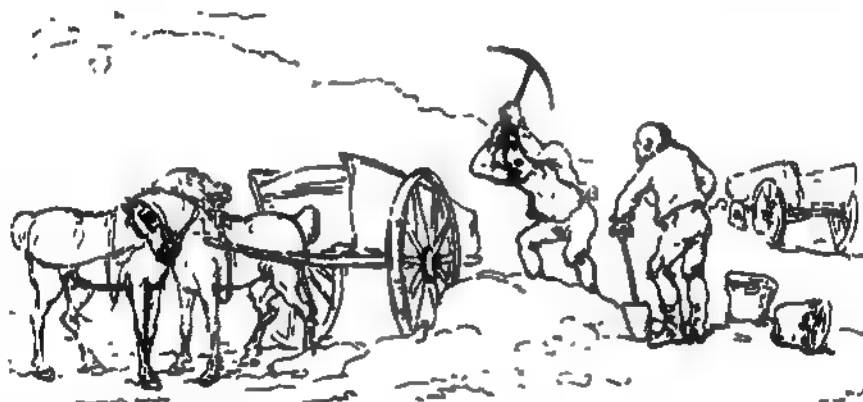

In the unrivalled collection of water-colour drawings of the English school, which are found on the walls of the sumptuous permanent Museum of Art ■ South Kensington, ■ ■ exhibited three characteristic examples of Rowlandson's talents in the caricature direction. The Parish Vestry, 1784, a humorous and spirited drawing, belonging to the artist's best time, formed part of the munificent gift made by Mr. William Smith ■ the nation; ■ did the second example, entitled Brook Green Fair, which ■ ■ should assign ■ about the year 1800. The third drawing, representing The old Elephant and Castle Inn, Newington, is also due to ■ liberal donor, being the gift of G. W. Atkinson, Esq.

As has been related, the caricaturist produced thousands of capital drawings, delicately tinted, excelling in all styles; and from these original designs, he executed in turn thousands of spirited etchings with his ■ hand, which were frequently coloured to reproduce the first sketches, or aquatinted by engravers (sometimes by himself), in imitation of drawings tenderly shaded in Indian ink, to which, in some instances, the resemblance is sufficiently faithful to deceive the eye of anyone who is not familiar with this method of reproduction.

It must be borne in mind—and we insist the ■ ■ earnestly ■ this point, as, from some incomprehensible wilfulness, it has seemingly been suffered to sink out of sight for a time—in treating of Rowlandson, that the ■ ■ essentially ■ artist; it is undoubtedly true that he was gifted (perhaps ■ ■ might consider fatally as far as his proper estimation is concerned) with the faculty known as caricature, and he excelled in burlesque, but his ■ ■ sufficiently high in other branches of the artist's profession to indicate that he ■ ■ equally qualified by original talents, by academic training which he might have turned ■ the best advantage, by a ■ of the beautiful unusually keen, and a happy power of expressing his first impressions, to take a foremost place amongst the best recognised masters of the early English school, ■ whose body he might have been an ornament, if he had not preferred his chosen calling of 'a free-lance' with a roving commission to work mischief. His remarkable gifts of originality, ever fertile, and apparently exhaustless, and facile powers of invention, either pleasant ■ terrific, which seemed spontaneous, were in his ■ insurmountable hindrances, instead of promoting his advancement and reputation ■ a painter of acknowledged value and eminence. He had the calamity—so fatal, in his and many other instances, to serious application—to succeed without sensible effort; from the very first his progress ■ ■ series of triumphs; ■ of the students of the Academy could draw such ludicrous and yet life-like figures, and thus his popularity with his fellow-labourers ■ assured; his studies from the nude, both in London and in Paris, were wonderful for the rapid ease and talent with which they were executed, and hence arose another source of glorification, and although personal vanity has ■ been mentioned in connection with the artist (he being thoroughly blind to everything but his own particular hobbies), the professors at home and abroad, and the members of the Academy themselves, ■ proud to patronise in their classes such precocious ability, which could accomplish the most difficult delineations without effort, and thus reflected credit ■ their schools; and the prodigy who drew from the life, in his youth, as vigorously and well ■ the most painstaking adepts in their maturity, could not fail ■ receive a dangerous amount of admiration, which tempted him to depend upon trifling exertions, and left his ambition without ■ spur.

While yet in his boyhood he was recognised as ■ genius, and was unhappily flattered into becoming a wayward one; the very fluency of his pencil, and the fidelity of his memory towards the grotesque side of things proved his stumbling-blocks. It is with ■ than ■ passing shade of regret that ■ reflect, with his far-seeing colleagues at the Academy and elsewhere, how eminent a painter ■■■ lost in the development of ■ caricaturist, admirable and unsurpassed in his ■■■ branch as Rowlandson must admittedly remain. The gifts which were in the man ■■■ marvellous, and beyond this he possessed nerve ■■ persevere, and manly resolution to sustain his exertions, ■■ he proved in his youth, and subsequently demonstrated when past life's meridian, times then being less prosperous, since fortunes and legacies had long ceased to fall in adventitiously, but the very excitement of setting the little world wondering, and making the public smile, while his tickled audience accorded him the cheapest popularity by crowding in admiration round his travesties, turned the wilful artist away from serious application, where no immediate fun ■■■ to be secured for either the limner ■■ his following.

Rowlandson's ■■■ of feminine loveliness, of irresistible graces of face, expression, and attitude, ■■■ unequalled in its way; several of his female portraits have been mistaken for sketches by Gainsborough ■■ Moreland, and as such, it is possible, since the caricaturist is so little known in this branch, that many continue to pass current. From 1777 to 1781, five years of Rowlandson's residence in Wardour Street, with all the freshness of his academic studies, and the laurels unfaded he had won in the schools, with golden opinions, as a youth of paramount promise, indulged by the most eminent of the Royal Academicians and the French professors, the artist practised the more laborious and prosaic, but surer branch of portrait-painting with success, and his pictures with ■ indifference which, while proving his disinterestedness and superiority ■ profit, is the more exasperating when ■ frequently told, as every one of Rowlandson's contemporaries who has mentioned the caricaturist ■ fails ■ reiterate, that the successive presidents of the Royal Academy, the great Reynolds, the royally patronised West, the courtly and fashionable Lawrence, the very men ■ have mentioned who were, it must be conceded, the ■ competent judges on the point, pronounced their conviction that his abilities entitled to acceptance, ■ one of themselves, a brother artist whose addition ■ their ranks they would have gloried to acknowledge, since he had the undoubted genius ■ reflect ■ lustre ■ the Academy, if he had exerted his talents in the recognised channels, and withstood the impulse of his notoriety for producing irresistibly droll novelties, which, as they foresaw, must infallibly prove pernicious to the practice of sober portraiture.

■■■ duly received by his patrons and well-wishers amongst the omnipotent Forty, and found their place ■■ the walls of the Royal Academy Exhibition without ■■ break—no barren compliment when it is remembered that his contemporaries were Reynolds, Gainsborough, and Hoppner, and that of the two ■■ three hundred works selected for the gallery ■■ the period referred to, the superb canvases of the artists named constituted an average of over ten per cent. of the entire exhibits.

II ■■ but think for a passing instant over the winsome portraiture of fair women, whose faces live, for the delectation of all time, ■■ the ■■■ of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, and ■■ few lesser luminaries, it is cruel to realise that Rowlandson, from sheer wantonness (promoted by what seemed a happy hit in 1784),¹ neglected his opportunities in the direction of portraiture.

¹ Vauxhall Gardens (503), An Italian Family (462), The Serpentine River (511); vide Catalogue of the Royal Academy (1784), Fourteenth Exhibition.

The versatile acquirements of ■ artist may, in ■ sense, be looked upon as an infirmity, a theory which had been thoroughly established while the subject of it remained in the flesh, and enjoyed a certain perverse gratification in contributing ■ support its soundness and perspicacity.

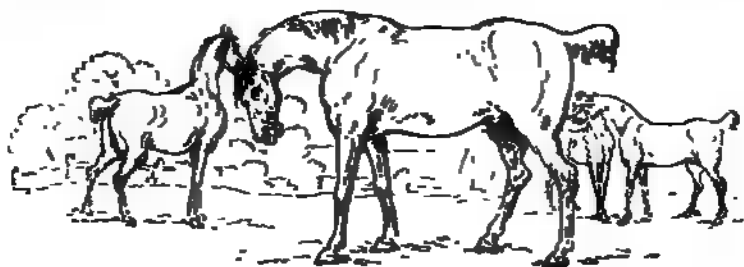

In landscape art we dis- ■ Rowlandson successfully rivalling the most respected practitioners in water-colours amongst his contemporaries, and helping the younger professional generation, that carried the art ■ perfection, to discard the obsolete theories of blackness for clear translucid colouring. His studies after nature ■ much esteemed, and ■ to be occasionally recognised in galleries and collections. It is a sufficiently capricious circumstance which has come within our experience—we have heard it asserted confidently more than once—that Rowlandson, the simple harmonious colourist and ready draughtsman, whose brush with limpid tints ■ deftly translated ■ paper the charms of sylvan scenes; the truthful artist who pictured the forest, fall, and glade, the distant hamlets amidst the foliage, the picturesque windings of the silver stream, the rustic cottages, the cattle wending leisurely through the fertile pastures, the mellow atmosphere, and the far-extending horizon, is often held a distinct individual from that other universally known Rowlandson—of equivocal reputation, it is hinted—whose daring reed-pen produced grotesques which perhaps were inimitable, but which, it is certain, were often indefensibly vulgar.

The artist's facility ■■■■ considerable that, had he been less scrupulous (his horror of fraud and imposition, especially in their pecuniary reference, ■■■■ implacable, in spite of, or perhaps in contradistinction to, his other levities), he could have allowed his ■■■■ productions, in the manner of his reputable contemporaries, and ■■■■ of deceased celebrities, whose subjects and method he chose ■■■■ imitate ■■■■ question of pure ingenuity—(while his own style is above all difficult to reproduce)—to pass current ■■■■ veritable originals by the masters. A book of etchings consisting entirely of these imitations is described in the course of this work, and he has managed to assume, without copying any particular picture, the modus operandi of the artists, and has varied his own ■■■■ of execution and disguised his salient individualities with such subtlety, that, ■■■■ the etching-point, slight trace of Rowlandson remains to betray the acknowledged imposition.

In his sketches after nature, ■■■■ have ventured to advance in respect to his female portraits and delicious studies from life, in many instances it is difficult to distinguish between the artless rustic groupings and charming pastoral drawings by George Moreland and Thomas Gainsborough, let alone those of Barrett, Hills, Howitt, Pugh, and other of his associates (who executed pictures lightly outlined with ■■■■ reed-pen, shaded with a ■■■■ tint and delicately washed with transparent water-colours, ■■■■ then the process),¹ and the acknowledged contributions of our versatile genius to this department, in the earlier stages of the captivating art of water-colour drawing.

The writer, in the ■■■■ of his preparation for this work, has been at the pains ■■■■ consult more than one well-recognised artist of reputation and authority; seeking for hints from professors whose celebrity extended well back towards the beginning of the nineteenth century; these respected ancients, who are now nearly all gathered to the shades to join the subject of this volume, being from their age, knowledge, and experience, as well ■■■■ from the traditions of their earlier masters, most likely to know and remember circumstances of a special character bearing upon the subject. Some of these worthies were actually working as contemporaries of the caricaturist who departed fifty years ago. The last time the writer met George Cruikshank, a few months before that truly splendid old gentleman passed away, of years and honour, to his well-earned repose, he took occasion to allude to the veteran's acknowledged admiration for the works of his extraordinarily endowed predecessor, James Gillray, in whose footsteps he had very literally commenced his career, being selected during the lifetime of the gifted caricaturist (when Gillray's genius had proved too exacting for the tension of his faculties, and his reason had unhappily departed, to be restored beyond an occasional lucid flitter) to complete several plates which the attacks of his malady had suspended. George Cruikshank, the most deservedly popular of the name, a little proud of having been thought worthy, while still a very young man (Gillray's faculties deranged in 1811), to take up the plates of the first genius that has adorned his art. With the earnestness of his disposition, and perhaps with characteristic partiality, he regarded the unfortunate Gillray as the greatest man, in his eyes, who ever lived, indisputably 'the prince of caricaturists,' he has appropriately christened him, and this title, won from a loving disciple, who, in his turn, became still more famous, is likely to last as long as the great caricaturist is remembered.

¹ In the early Exhibition Catalogues, studies in water-colours, where the primitive sepia or Indian ink was supplemented by other tints, ■■■■ described as STAINED DRAWINGS.

George Cruikshank voluntarily called on the writer to express the interest he good-naturedly felt in certain slight records of past cari-caturists then publishing, and to communicate some valuable facts about the works of his father, a meritorious artist whose reputation would be widely increased if his pictures, exhibited at the Royal Academy, were better known. On a subsequent occasion the cheery veteran imparted various anecdotes on the subject within his knowledge, but confessed that he had never been admitted to terms of personal familiarity with either Gillray or Rowlandson in the flesh. It was his father, Isaac Cruikshank—for whose graphic powers in the same walk he expressed the best deserved and truest filial respect—who enjoyed their intimacy, and it was he who related (with a genial force happily done justice to by his descendant) to his deeply interested son the circumstances with which George was acquainted.

The writer was naturally eager to gather, while there was yet time, any facts which might be of importance for the furtherance of his contemplated sketch of Rowlandson's career, which was then occupying all his energies, from the last representative of the famous caricaturists, who formed, in himself, a desirable link with the generation of the Georgian epoch, which had been dissolved into the thinnest elements for three-fourths of a century back. Cruikshank expressed the most cordial interest in the undertaking, and genially declared, by way of encouragement, which is the writer's most appreciated reward, that he should look forward to its successful completion, and further promised that if, in revising his notes, and the personal memoirs, touching upon such kindred topics (which, as he imparted, had long employed his leisure), he could discover any allusions of an interesting description to his gifted contemporary Rowlandson, or any similar memoranda left by his father, he would communicate them for the benefit of the present volume. His death has unfortunately prevented the accomplishment of this valued service, which he volunteered spontaneously with his well-known readiness to confer favours.

The point about Rowlandson which had most impressed George Cruikshank is somewhat original, and properly belongs to this part of our subject ; hence we have been glad to have an opportunity of quoting the trustworthy authority of the aged caricaturist. 'Rowlandson,' said George, 'was a remarkable man in most respects ;' the waywardness of his youth and the notoriety of his gambling days seemed to have rather prejudicially influenced the mind of his simpler successor, who had taken his place in 1827, when he had, almost of right, succeeded to the working-table and unfinished plates of James Gillray, many years before.

Cruikshank, moreover, considered Rowlandson's academical his successful rivalry of Mortimer in depicting the nude, the knowledge of his and the fluency he had acquired, were altogether exceptional features in the profession of a caricaturist, his English views; but, according to his kindly creed, mellowed by age—his steel trifle tempered since his youth, when his shafts were without poignancy—'Rolley' was somewhat unreflecting, and reckless in exposing the infirmities of others, having but regard for his reputation or the feelings of society, and further he had suffered himself to be led away from the exercise of his legitimate subjects, to produce works of a reprehensible tendency, which respectable dictum will probably find numerous subscribers.

■ SHIPPING SCENE.

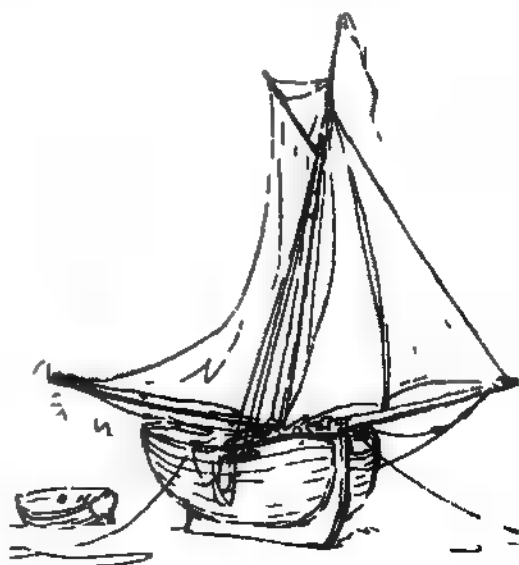

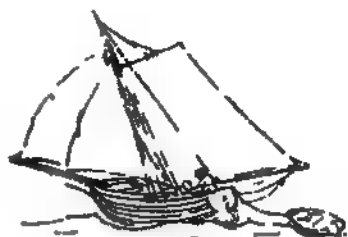

Strangely it may sound, it is not as a caricaturist that Rowlandson had gained Cruikshank's admiration; he appreciated the artist enthusiastically as an accomplished water-colour painter, the equal in his opinion of most of the founders of his special school. Rowlandson's masterly power in the delineation of the figure, and his happy gift, amounting almost to inspiration, of portraying female charms of face and person, deserved high regard in Cruikshank's estimation; his peculiarly felicitous pictures of quaint Continental life, and the examples his free and scholarly handling held out, as admirable models of style to the French caricaturists of his day; the social sketches produced in Paris at the beginning of the century, though remarkable for neatness and delicacy, being laborious, formal, timid, and wanting in that racy comicality, and dashing power of expression, characterising the drawings under consideration, ■ which George accorded unqualified praise.

It was chiefly for his skill in landscape delineation that Cruikshank respected the artist under discussion, and ■ especially, ■ he declared, warming with his reminiscences of the drawings he called to mind, he had ■ seen anything superior, in his estimation, ■ Rowlandson's water-side and maritime sketches, for their clear freshness and simple air of fidelity to nature; the banks of the river, the 'pool' filled with vessels, wharves, landing-places, ports, and naval stations, with the noble men-of-war lying off; and the bustling craft, travelling between the fleet and the shore; the groups of busy figures, far and near, happily introduced in ■ state of seeming activity; the shipping, which he drew with picturesque ■ and dexterity, his far-spreading landscapes and distant horizons, the treatment of the water, the movement of his skies, and the general ■ of expanse and atmosphere, were beautiful in the extreme, all noted down, as they were, without apparently a second thought, with the slightest possible labour, recalling in a forcible degree the drawings of William Vandevelde, who was, in Cruikshank's opinion, the only artist whose marine studies could be quoted in comparison with those of Rowlandson.

We ■ necessarily anxious to avoid the suspicion of attempting to prove ■ much, and it must be admitted that ■ do ■ pronounce Rowlandson ■ Rubens, ■ William Vandevelde, ■ Reynolds, and ■ Moreland, all ■ once; any ■ than ■ can be deluded into the belief that his landscape drawings might be claimed by Turner, Girtin, De Wint, Fielding, ■ David Cox. In treating of our artist in relation to the truly great

■ which have been frequently put into contrast with his own, it ■ not be forgotten that his works are spoken of, ■ they exist, under their modest condition of sketches manipulated in the very slightest manner possible, and, if considered ■ all in juxtaposition with those of the higher luminaries, it is only by the side of studies executed under similar circumstances; it would be a piece of pretension, entirely out of character on any part, to even suggest submitting Rowlandson's attempts in the most respectable exercise of his talents in competition with the more substantial finished and ambitious pictures bequeathed us by the select few of really eminent painters, whose unrivalled works cannot fail to afford the most unqualified delight to all cultivated lovers of art of whatever school. Their productions are admitted to stand alone, even though there exist diversities of opinion, schisms, and heresies in regard to the generality of the profession.

THE QUAY.

In resuming a summary of Rowlandson's conceptions in the caricature branch, we must notice, while contemplating his strongly characterised works, that, while the rest of his competitors in the grotesque walk have in most examples left no record of their prints beyond the plates on which they were executed, for every subject he has produced of his own designing, at least a corresponding drawing has existed, and frequently three or four variations of leading ideas are worked out as completed pictures, without, however, any appearance of experimentalising under difficulties of execution—technical points never puzzled his skill; and such daring flights as Rubens ventured with the brush, in the way of foreshortened and difficult attitudes, Rowlandson's reed-pen accomplished right merrily, as if by its own volition, and without a thought on the part of its highly-trained wielder, about such common-place requirements as the posing of living models or preparatory sketches. The original notions of Rowlandson's whimsical inventions are in the generality of instances far worthier of attention than the most spirited etchings he thought fit to circulate after them; and it is well to keep in mind that the artist has produced some thousands of humorous conceptions (placing his more serious studies out of the question), of which an engraving has appeared; and amongst these unpublished delineations may be included several of the most ingenious and attractive pictures executed by his hand, especially from the year 1790, that is to say, for more than two-thirds of his professional life—a circumstance with which every collector of original drawings by this artist is thoroughly conversant.

The work of Rowlandson may be divided into periods; the work belonging properly to the several stages is tolerably distinctive as to general characteristics. An adept can positively determine, within a year or two, the particular section in which his designs, when the date happens to be wanting, may be justly assigned, and, ■ his manifold sketches and etchings extend over the space of half ■ century, this circumstance is ■ trifle remarkable in itself.

The first period, as far ■ his published plates are concerned, includes his smaller social and political satires; the execution, though free and fluent, ■ his productions uniformly were, exhibits indications of ■ which is ■ ■ traceable as his method grew mellowed, and practice confirmed the facility which ■ to him as ■ gift. These juvenile etchings bear ■ affinity to Gillray's ■ of manipulation than is traceable in his subsequent cartoons. A view of A Hazard Table and its frequenters (E.O. or the fashionable Vowels, October 28, 1781) offers perhaps the best indications of his growing powers, between 1774 and 1783. His publishers ■ Humphrey, Holland, Jackson, and ■ few others; and he further appears, in conjunction with J. Jones, to have gone into the publishing way himself, ■ 103 Wardour Street.

In 1784 the excitement of the famous Westminster Election ■ to have carried him more thoroughly into political satires, and, ■ we observe, his humour discovered ■ unflagging source of impulse round the parliamentary candidates, Fox, Wray, and Hood; the fair Duchess of Devonshire, Lady Duncannon, and honest Sam House, the Whig canvassers, and their opponents ■ the ministerial side, the Hon. Mrs. Hobart (Lady Buckinghamshire), and the Duchess of Gordon; together with the whimsicalities of the polling-booth. If we were asked to select his most noticeable social and satirical effusions, we should incline to particularise English Curiosity, or the Foreigner stared out of countenance; 1784, ■ the Fashions of the Day; and A Sketch from Nature (January 24, 1784).

In 1784, Rowlandson realised the ■ extent both of his powers of fancy and his mastery of the ■ of water-colour delineation. He discontinued the practice of sending portraits to the Exhibition of the Royal Academy, in which he had persevered for five years, and contributed in their places three mirth-provoking drawings, which must have produced no little sensation amongst the visitors, who ■ unaccustomed to such works. These ■ the inimitable Vauxhall Gardens, which reveals his talents at their best, An Italian Family, and The Serpentine River.

In 1785 appeared ■ of John Raphael Smith's graceful publications after Rowlandson's more refined originals, notably Vauxhall, Opera Boxes, Tying and Trifling, An Italian Family, A French Family, Grog on Board, Tea on Shore; Filial Affection, Trip Gretna Green; Reconciliation; Intrusion on Study, or Painter disturbed; Comfort in the Gout; and several other excellent subjects in his most finished manner, besides an animated scene after Henry Wigstead, John Gilpin's Return to London.

Rowlandson five important and highly humorous drawings, displaying advanced qualities in the direction of execution, to the Royal Academy in 1786; those of the first consequence An English Review, A French Review, the pair exhibited at the International Exhibition 1862; Opera House Gallery, under which designation, suspect, recognise his Box Lobby Loungers, published the very year; A French Family (published the year previous); and A Coffee House, of which can discover no further record.

Among the engraved works for the year must refer the print of Box Lobby Loungers, already mentioned, and Covent Garden Theatre, the most noticeable to size, subject, and the figures introduced.

Rowlandson sent four known works to the Royal Academy, the season following (1787). They were French Barracks, superlative drawing, Grog Board Ship, Countrymen and Sharpers (engraved by Sherwin as Smithfield Sharpers), and The Morning Dram, or Hunts- rising, engraved as Four o'clock in the Country, S. W. Fores (October 20, 1790). All Rowlandson's contributions for this year have been published; indeed, it is very possible, from the popularity of the caricaturist's novel exhibits, that all the pictures he sent to the Royal Academy straightway issued copper. There are two exceptions, The Serpentine and A Coffee House, of which the writer has never succeeded in meeting impressions, but it by follows that later they may not to light, and it does unlikely that the first named, The Serpentine River, may be another version of Cold Broth and Calamity (published in 1792).

Amongst the engraved works of 1787, the writer instances Baron Ron's Dental Surgery, Transplanting of Teeth, and series of five Hunting Scenes, The Morning, The Meet, The Run, The Death, and The Dinner, published in folio size, and somewhat rarely with as a set.

In the two succeeding years Rowlandson again threw his etching-point into party conflicts, and out with a shower of political squibs the amenities of the Regency Struggle. Nothing very ambitious in the way of social satires appeared in 1788. Among minor subjects ■ may allude ■ Housebreakers, A Cart Race, The School for Scandal, A Fencing Match, A Print Sale, Lust and Avarice, and Luxury and Desire, ■ being slightly above the average. In 1789 and 1790 but few works of exceptional character were issued to gratify Rowlandson's devoted admirers or the general public. She don't deserve it! Don't he deserve it? A Racing Series, The Course, The Betting Post, The Mount, The Start, and A Fresh Breeze, take the lead. La Place des Victoires ■ Paris belongs to 1789, and, in the writer's estimation, it is perhaps ■ of the most attractive subjects due to the artist's pencil, exhibiting, as it does, the quaint surroundings of Parisian life, ■ noted by the caricaturist before the Revolutionary era—delineations of feminine beauty, and studies of real character, such ■ no effort of the imagination could fabricate, unless assisted by travel, a familiar acquaintance with the locality, and keen observation. A fitting companion is given ■ this delightful subject in another important drawing, crowded with diversified life and animated groups, produced in 1800; The Thuilleries in Paris, a reminiscence of previous studies in the French metropolis, of manners noted anterior ■ the destruction of antiquated fashions; the dainty belles of ton, and the picturesque society which might be discovered flourishing under the reign of Louis XVI., before the inauguration of the all-devouring Republic, which worked ■ change in ■ few feverish months of turbulence, in which all the recognised phases of the past ■■ lost, than many sober decades had effected in their better regulated courses.

The best of Rowlandson's publications for 1790 ■■ A Kick-up at ■ Hasard Table, in which, as may be supposed, he was perfectly ■ home; Four o'clock ■ the Morning in Town, which was also in the artist's way, and its companion, Four o'clock in the Morning in the Country; Frog-hunting (Gallic gourmets fins), and Tythe Pig, ■ fine old English equivalent.

The year 1791 ■■ richer in those more ambitious plates, which the writer is seeking to identify, and several of the caricaturist's choicer subjects appeared, etched by his hand, and finished in aquatint, to facsimile the meritorious original drawings. A Squall in Hyde Park is ■ of the ■■ two of delineations of the highest type, which adequately demonstrate the exceptional qualifications of the artist; and these, ■ have no hesitation in averring, have ■■ been excelled in their walk, as far as executive ability, of loveliness, grouping, movement, grasp of character, powers of observation, and diverting qualities concerned. Another remarkable subject of extraordinary ability, founded on Rowlandson's Continental studies, entitled French Barracks (exhibited in 1787), and its pendant, English Barracks, issued this year. An Inn Yard on Fire, belonging to the same important series; The Attack; The Prospect before us; The Pantheon; Chaos is Come Again, in allusion to the dilapidated state of Drury Lane theatre condemned by the surveyors; Toxophilites; House breakers; Damp; Sheets and Slugs in a Saw Pit, among the numerous lesser subjects, bring up the total of the truly estimable works which gratified the public in 1791.

Cold Broth and Calamity, a skating scene representing disasters in the park, from a ludicrous point of view; A Dutch Academy, drawn from the caricaturist's experiences in the Netherlands; and Studious Gluttons the leading plates published in 1792.

New Shoes, a small, but delicate subject, belongs to 1793.

In 1797 appeared the admirable plates published after Rowlandson's studies in the Netherlands; we cannot too highly commend such inimitable originals as Fyge Dam, Amsterdam; Stadt House, Amsterdam; Companion View, Amsterdam; and Place de Mer, Antwerp.

Admiral Nelson Recruiting with his Brave Tars after the Glorious Battle of the Nile, published in 1798; a series of London Views, of considerable merit and importance, entrances to the great metropolis from the four leading turnpikes; and a series of twelve plates portraying the Comforts of Bath, are most worthy of attention in the year, large studies of reviews of the Volunteer Forces, held under the threat of the anticipated French invasion.

Distress, from a large picture, indicating the horrors of shipwreck with tragic impressiveness, is assigned to 1799.

Summer Amusement, a Game at Bowls; Doctor Botherum, the Mountebank; Preparations for the Academy; and A French Ordinary, among the noticeable features of the artist's publications in 1800; the peculiarly interesting panorama of the Parisian world anterior to the French Revolution, entitled The Thuilleries in Paris also produced this year.

Rowlandson's skill as an etcher had further, about this time, provided him with abundance of work in executing the humorous conceptions of Woodward and Bunbury after his ■■■ characteristic fashion.

Rowlandson's plate of The Brilliants, and a long series of subjects designed by Woodward, with many originals of his own, sufficiently excellent in their order, but not of the first consequence, found their way to the public in 1801. The leading print-publishers ■ the West End, Rudolph Ackermann, S. W. Fores, Williamson, and Rowlandson himself,¹ ■ his residence, 1 James Street, Adelphi, issued an inexhaustible collection of highly ludicrous social satires, and numerous patriotic and political subjects, during intervening years; and in 1807 the name of Thomas Tegg of Cheapside ■ added to the print-publishers who employed the remunerative talents of the indefatigable caricaturist. Rowlandson also continued to execute the whimsical conceptions of less qualified draughtsmen, and ■ of comicalities—by Woodward, Bunbury, Wigstead, Nixon, and other fashionable amateurs, who possessed the humorous vein, but lacked the skill to give their ideas a fitting form for presentation to the public—were put into acceptable shape, and etched by our artist at this period.

In 1808 appeared the long succession of Miseries of Human Life, of which examples occur in previous years; and Rowlandson settled down, somewhat grimly, under worthy Mr. Ackermann's auspices, to take up the gauntlet against the dreaded Buonaparte, the great little Corsican, against whom Gillray had waged such savage warfare until his powers dwindled into vacancy, and George Cruikshank stepped valiantly into the place of the colossus of caricaturists, and carried on the combat with unflagging zeal and whimsicality ■ his ■ account. Rowlandson's ludicrous attacks upon the ambitious 'disturber of the peace of Europe' were duly appreciated by his audience, and the demand for these blood-and-thunder caricatures increased monthly, to the extreme delectation of the great British public, whose antipathies to the conquering general were, at least, founded on sound and excusable principles, and if the overflowing ■ of their detestation sometimes blinded the people to points of detail, and wilful misrepresentations passed current, and rather swamped their more generous sentiments—which were put out of sight for awhile—it must be remembered that this patriotic zeal ■ well directed against the ■ who had announced his august intention of subjugating England, and was, by accord, considered ■ the ■ enemy, and anyone who had indulged the temerity of openly acknowledging the grander elements of his character, since pretty tolerably established, would have been flouted by acclamation, and ■ are not ■ but the national scorn would have fittingly signalised such ■ unpatriotic enormity.

¹ The artist's name frequently ■ upon his plates ■ his own publisher, and, ■ might be anticipated, the prints produced under this sponsorship ■ invariably of his most popular description.

It is certain that the caricaturist's travesties of the little emperor, his burlesques of his great actions, and grandiose declarations (which, in themselves, occasionally overdid the heroic, and trenched hazardously on the ludicrous), his figurative displays of the mean origin of the imperial family, with the cowardice and depravity of its members, ■ the popular applause ; ■ did the satirist's representations of the hollowness of Boney's vaunted victories, and the treachery of his designs in the days of his success ; and, when disasters began to cloud the career of the mighty Napoleon, and cherished projects ■ met with sickening failures—as army after army, collected for the slaughter by schemes, lies, fraud, and force, melted away, and the prostrate powers of the Continent plucked up courage, singly ■ first and finally in legions, until the end of the Corsican's glory arrived—the artist lent his skill to celebrate the delight of the public, and the rejoicings over the discomfiture of the traditional bugbear ; glib cartoons were hurried off by Ackermann and often by Tegg—the City competing with the West End in the loyal contest of proving the national enmity to Buonaparte, by buying every caricature—the ■ extravagant the better relished—that the artists, who toiled like Trojans while the harvest lasted, could contrive to furnish in ■ for the demand.

A suspicion ■ our mind that, in too many cases, the incentive ■ to gratify the hatred of the Corsican, rather than any remarkable inherent merit that could be discovered in the satires ; the best of which were but feeble vehicles for the exhibition of the jovial abilities of the designers ; who, ■ dare venture ■ hint, found themselves a little out of their element, plunged, ■ it were, in the 'blood and iron' theory, striking out with their etching points with the most approved pantomimic vengeance ! Very few of these mock-heroic sallies imprint themselves ■ the recollection by the sheer force of their ■ brilliancy, as was the ■ in the single instance of James Gillray, in the past, and as happened—an undeniable test of the veritable fire of genius—frequently with the cartoons of John Tenniel within our own experience, when the magnitude of the occasion has conjured up the inspiration, and rekindled the latent flame.

Our reflections upon the bellicose creations of Rowlandson and Cruikshank, while their hostile vapourings continue irresistibly droll, ■ stir the ■ passionate emotions ■ reach impulses which lie below the surface ; being risible, it is true, but the reverse of inspired ; and although many a hearty laugh may be enjoyed over the ludicrous turn the twain caricaturists have, in spite of themselves, given to situations of ■ avowedly tragic tendency, their very fury ■ an unctuous jest, their simulated earnestness takes ■ farcical turn, and the result of a careful review, as the writer has made quite recently, of their prolific slaughterous sallies, is the conviction that, often unconsciously to themselves, they have chiefly succeeded, from the inevitable bent of their innate humoristic impulses, in burlesquing the fiery feeling abroad, which the public ■ contented to gratify in pictorial guise.

It is certain that those discriminating critics best qualified to appreciate the talents of Rowlandson and Cruikshank, who worked up the anti-Corsican crusade contemporaneously, ■ continually disposed to regret that the wondrous inventive abilities of these fertile designers were not exercised in a ■ congenial field.

Our caricaturist worked away, fierce and implacable, following every turn of Boney's fortunes with a show of savage ardour, until the idol fell in 1815. Rowlandson, in addition to the immense mass of caricatures which he fabricated with unflagging energy, ■ out brilliantly with several large transparencies, painted for public exhibition, outside Ackermann's Repository, on the occasion of the general illuminations, which fittingly signalled the successes of the allied armies after Leipsig, the final downfall of the Emperor after Waterloo, and the subsequent peace rejoicings.

A fresh subject for the exercise of Rowlandson's caricature capabilities was furnished in 1809 by the scandalous revelations which were disclosed, ■ evidence at the bar of the House of Commons, during the 'inquiry into the corrupt practices of the Commander-in-Chief, in the administration of the army.' With ill-advised weakness the popular Duke of York seems to have transferred the exercise of the patronage legitimately invested in his department, to Mrs. M. A. Clarke, a clever and unscrupulous mistress, whose extravagances he had for awhile contributed to support at Gloucester Place. The demand for this exciting pabulum ■ sufficiently eager to induce the caricaturist to bring out ■ fresh pictorial satire almost daily, and sometimes two or ■ appeared ■ the ■ day, while the 'delicate investigation' was proceeding, and the public interest in the circumstances remained at a boiling heat. We ■ not inclined ■ argue that any of these ephemeral compositions, superior as they were to the ruck of contemporaneous productions, were worthy, in any degree, of the artist's graphic powers, ■ were likely to contribute to his celebrity. For ■ time

Rowlandson's ambition seemed to cool down, and although he was working hard, and producing a fair average of results, he appeared satisfied to turn his skill to the most prosaic account, to the means of earning a livelihood. He made no fresh efforts to astonish his admirers, or to sustain his fame by novel efforts of genius, such as we have particularised as appearing before the commencement of the nineteenth century.

Among the countless caricatures, good, bad, and indifferent, according to the circumstances of their publication, produced between 1809 and the close of the designer's career, nearly twenty years later, we cannot direct the reader's attention to many subjects above the generality of similar productions by Rowlandson's hand. It must be borne in mind that the artist's opportunities for graceful delineation had been considerably curtailed; the fair leaders of the old picturesque generation, whose effigies beam so charmingly in Reynolds's canvases, and the days of powder, flowing locks, silk coats, laces, lappels, and their accompaniments, had gradually disappeared, and left a prosier people, of sober exterior, in their stead. The difference between the exteriors of Rowlandson's lively personages, at the earlier part of the career, is so distinct from the outward appearance of his surroundings, and of the world which continued to exercise his pencil, at the close of his years, that it is extremely difficult, with the evidence before our eyes, to credit that such extreme changes could take place within the lifetime of one individual. The wanton cruelty of time in dealing thus harshly with the delicious models, which in one period seemed expressly constituted for the exercise of Rowlandson's pencil, may have discouraged the artist, and given him a distaste for exertions of ambition in which his heart had no part, while his fancy still hovered round his retrospects of the brilliant scenes, at home and abroad, that had met his sight in his gallant youth.

A few of Rowlandson's plates in 1811 recall his best days, but they are not too confident that the originals veritably belong to the year which is engraved upon the plates; indeed, in two at least, Exhibition Stare Case, Somerset House, and Royal Academy, Somerset House, the caricatures are most probably reprints, with the dates altered. This practice, common enough in his day, is productive of some slight confusion; all Rowlandson's most popular conceptions, 'the palpable hits' which held their own in the public favour, and were eagerly secured, were republished from year to year, to meet the demand, and, in most cases, the plate was freshly dated, as if the print had only then appeared for the first time. This principle has complicated our task, as it is most difficult to secure even a solitary impression of the finer works, and but scant traces exist of tracing them back to the actual date, in the absence of any considerable collections in which the student may apply for purposes of reference and comparison. If the reader will be the pains to consult the 'Appendix,' containing the nearest approach to an arrangement of Rowlandson's works, under the years of publication, the writer could arrive at under existing circumstances, it will be seen that the same caricatures frequently reappear, with altered dates, for successive years.

ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST.

In the latter part of the artist's career, although he executed a great many works of interest in themselves, and his inexhaustible social satires often meritorious, and always ingenious, his best talents were devoted to the production of original drawings for immediate sale. They were chiefly disposed of through the assistance of Rudolph Ackermann, 101 Strand; and S. W. Fores, Piccadilly. Both these steady patrons of the declining years of his genius, who must, in some sense, have found the close of his life exposed to somewhat chilling influences, are reported, on good authority, to have held hundreds of Rowlandson's original drawings, scrap-books, and portfolios, filled with his admirable sketches at the time of his death; but these collections have of course been since dispersed.

In addition to the immense gathering of water-colour drawings left by Rowlandson, which had accumulated in the possession of those respected gentlemen with whom he held business relations, there were several fine collections, formed about the same period, to be found in the possession of his intimates. Mitchell the banker, his constant friend in town, with whom Rowlandson frequently travelled on the Continent, had secured the most remarkable gallery of the artist's diversified views abroad, and particularly his sketches of life and character in France and the Netherlands, the latter being the most remarkable for broad humour. Henry Angelo, the fencing-master, and Bannister, the comedian, ancient school-fellows of the caricaturist, and, as will be seen, faithful comrades through life, were also steady collectors of his picturesque eccentricities, and many noblemen, and celebrities of the day—among them is mentioned the Duke of the dashing, and somewhat irrepressible, Lord Barrymore—took a pride in filling their folios with his works, which, as they told, they justly esteemed 'an inexhaustible fund of amusement.'

A few later collections, with the names of the owners, and the titles of the leading subjects, are mentioned at the end of this volume, with a view to completing the interest of the subject, and affording a slight indication of the whereabouts of many of his productions.

It appears from the statements of Rudolph Ackermann, Rowlandson's industry ■ such that the considerate ■ of the fashionable Repository—favourite lounge of the dilettanti as it was—at last found it difficult, as regards the selling department, to keep pace with his friend's creative abilities. In short, the artist produced drawings faster than the public, ■ it seems evident, felt inclined to purchase them for the time being, and it became ■ perplexing problem how to increase the demand proportionately to the supply ; for the multiplication of the sketches for awhile—probably under the spur of ■ emergency, ■ the pressure of apprehensions for the future—became ■ overwhelming that the worthy publisher, in his relation as a practical man of business, fancied he foresaw the approaching depreciation of the value of Rowlandson's drawings making such strides, on the strength of ■ overstocked market, he ■ afraid, in the end, the artist's remuneration would be ■ seriously diminished, that it would ■ be worth his while ■ persevere, unless ■ new line could be successfully struck out.

These anticipations were probably well founded, and ■ cannot but acknowledge that our artist had discarded prudence, and become thoroughly reckless—at least, as far as ■ can judge by appearances, for possibly he had more confidence in the ultimate request for his studies than was entertained by his friendly employers, and time has proved the soundness of his judgment. If the story we are told of his novel method of multiplying his drawings is serious, it will strike the reader that Mr. Ackermann had ■ to feel anxious, ■ his protégé's account. It is related that Rowlandson would saunter from his neighbouring lodgings in the Adelphi, round to the Repository of Arts, and, as the title of Mr. Ackermann's establishment ■ no misnomer, every possible appliance ■ therein found ready to hand. The artist would then order ■ of vermilion, and another of Indian ink, ready ground, from the colourist's room, with reed pens, and several sheets of drawing-paper ; he would then combine his inks in the proportions he thought proper, in the flesh lines vermilion predominated, in draperies Indian ink, shadows ■ ■ warm mixture of the two, and distant objects ■ faintly rendered in Indian ink alone. The outline was filled in ■ this principle, but, as the designer's ■ manual and dexterous rapidity had ceased ■ satisfy him, he had ingeniously discovered an expeditious method of multiplication sufficient for his purpose, without resorting to the sister art of engraving. The drawing was made on the principle essential in any engraving which has to give impressions, that is, the subject was reversed, right being changed ■ left—the only extra ■ required ; the outline was somewhat stronger, and the reed-pen ■■■ fully charged than was the usual practice, and when the design was completed it formed the matrix from which, before the ink became fixed, by means of ■ press, and paper damped ■ the proper consistency, it ■■ easy ■■ print off duplicates ■ long as the ink held out. We are rather inclined to speculate that, ingenious ■ the process seems, in description, it would by no means turn out ■ perennial flowing fountain, and two or three decent replicas would exhaust the original, however judiciously manipulated. The copies obtained by this manifold contrivance were corrected and strengthened, according ■ their requirements; the series of impressions ■■ then shaded with Indian ink, ■ as to lend the figures contour and solidity, and express the lighter distance; and then ■■ the final tinting, in delicate washes of colour, and the completed works ■■■ ready for introduction to the public. The writer does not believe that this modus operandi ■■ ever followed up systematically; that it has been resorted to on occasions, his own observations have demonstrated; and he confesses to ■ passing acquaintance with a collection of drawings by the artist (belonging to a gentleman of distinction, who is quite satisfied as to their merits), which are for the most part the results of this system, and he has ■■ than once, in the ■■ of his peregrinations, ■■ the matrix design, very spread and mysterious as to outline, having been exhausted in the working, but shaded with spirit, coloured, and sent into the world, a shameless left-handed production, craftily smuggled into circulation to confuse collectors, and throw discredit ■ its dexter counterparts. This accounts for ■ certain proportion of the duplicates after Rowlandson, which are of frequent occurrence; and often have purchasers felt their self-esteem lowered, when another possessor of the ■■ design in a firmer outline has assured them that they have been deceived into buying ■ ■■ copy, oblivious that the guilty pair are both due to the hand of the master, and that possibly other members of the ■■ illicit family are lurking in the folios of rival amateurs. A grand central gathering of works by Rowlandson, presuming ■ person of sufficient enterprise could be found to prosecute the scheme of ■ comprehensive exhibition of the artist's works, would reveal ■■ curiosities in the way of reproductive capability.

ROWLANDSON THE CARICATURIST.

For the credit of our artist, and the comfort of collectors, ■■ ■■ record our assurance that this crafty method was never persevered in, the replicas issued under this illegitimate contrivance are confined to ■ brief period, the temptation to flood the market ■■ kept within restricted limits, and Mr. Ackermann's busi-

■ aptitude quickly discovered a method of enhancing the caricaturist's reputation and augmenting his means, without the necessity of resorting to tricks of ill-advised ingenuity. The successful projection of ■ series of monthly publications allowed the indefatigable projector—who exercised a princely liberality in his dealings, ■ publishers go—to pay his friend, the artist, ■ handsomely, that he ■ relieved from the necessity of multiplying his sketches in any inordinate profusion, and enabled him to take more time and pains, both in seeking his subjects, and working them out at his ease. The results of this happy ■■ ception, The Poetical Magazine, the three Tours of Doctor Syntax, and The Dance of Death, enjoyed unqualified popularity. They were followed by other works of a corresponding description, which ■■■ also well received. The publisher had his reward;

■ have every ■■ ■ believe that Rowlandson enjoyed his fair share of these successful ventures; and continued to furnish book-illustrations, steadily following up the ■■ branch he had discovered for the exercise of his abilities. Mr. Ackermann's enterprise provided him ample occupation. These octavo prints ■■ produced ■ the same principle ■ the superior plates after his chefs-d'œuvre of the Academy period: ■

neat and carefully finished drawing of the original design was first prepared (these studies ■■■ afterwards purchased by Mr. Ackermann), and Rowlandson etched the outline sharply and clearly ■ the copper plate, an impression from the 'bitten-in' outline ■■ printed on drawing-paper, and the artist put in his shadows, modelling of forms and sketchy distance, with Indian ink, in the most delicate handling possible; the shadows ■■ then copied in aquatint ■ the outlined plate, sometimes by the designer, but in most ■■ by an engraver who practised this particular branch, which ■ few experts ■■ able to manipulate with considerable dexterity and nicety. Rowlandson next completed the colouring of his ■■■ Indian ink shaded impression in delicate tints, harmoniously selected | his sense of colour being of a refined order as regarded the disposal of tender shades agreeable to the eye. His aptitude in this respect is quite as remarkable as his [redacted] of delineation; and, if his outlines can be copied with any approach [redacted] deceiving the eye of a connoisseur, [redacted] attempt to imitate his colouring, simple as it remained in its characteristics, is tolerably certain [redacted] betray the fraud.

The tinted impression, which [redacted] intentionally finished with greater delicacy and elaboration than the artist generally displayed, served as a copy for imitation, which [redacted] handed to Mr. Ackermann's trained staff of colourists, the publisher finding constant employment for a number of clever persons whom he had educated expressly for this skilled employment. These artists had worked under his auspices and personal supervision for years, until, by constant practice, and the pains which were taken by the publisher [redacted] improve their abilities, they attained a degree of perfection and neatness [redacted] arrived at before, and almost beyond belief in the present day, when the system has fallen into comparative disuse. The assistants did their best [redacted] reproduce the effect of the original drawings, and the number of impressions required to satisfy the public must have kept them constantly [redacted] work, and occasionally jeopardised their high finish.

There is [redacted] amazing contrast between the plates issued from the Repository, worked out like elaborate water-colour drawings, in subdued, well-balanced tints, with the utmost lightness and skill of touch, and the lurid chromatic daubs which pass [redacted] to the present day, as Rowlandson's caricatures were issued from Cheapside 'price one shilling coloured,' after [redacted] school of vulgarity to which the panorama of the Lord Mayor's Show at [redacted] penny, with its four yards of florid tenuity, is quite a refined work of art.

We are not inclined to offer uncharitable reflections [redacted] Rowlandson's City publisher; the caricatures—excepting always certain rougher specimens, loosely executed enormities after designs by some of the amateurs of the period, which indubitably belong to the slipshod order—are fair enough in their way, when [redacted] is lucky enough to meet with uncoloured copies; it is the bad [redacted] of his customers, the respectable dealer evidently stooped [redacted] flatter, with which [redacted] inclined to disagree, and [redacted] think justifiably; for although it [redacted] very good of the gentleman in question to issue [redacted] many copies of his plates, with a providential eye to the future, that impressions [redacted] sufficiently [redacted] to this day, all print-buyers must deplore the waste of staring colour expended in making his publications abominable to the sight of modern purchasers, and ruinous [redacted] the fair fame of the designer, by the uncompromising use of three positive pigments, red, blue, and yellow, to which, with [redacted] occasional brown, the colour-box seemed restricted, in ■■■ cases liberally plastered over the etchings—figures, sky, buildings and background being treated to the ■■■■ smart hues in undiluted garishness, which utterly confuses the mind ■■ to the meritorious qualities of the subjects ■■ bespattered, and has the sinister effect, deplorable in itself, of compelling persons of chaste dispositions to dread caricatures as being ■■ the surface something worse than scarlet abominations, fiendishly aggravated with additional lurid iniquities of a depraving tendency.

We have introduced Rowlandson in his later relation to the arts, as a skilful and popular contributor of book illustrations; we cannot leave this portion of ■■■ subject without offering a cursory review of his various labours in this capacity, since the wider circulation of printed publications has made his name more familiar ■■ the great world than the finest masterpieces already alluded to, which ■■■■ doomed ■■ remain unknown and inaccessible to the bulk of the public.

The first independent publication we have ■■ notice was simply ■■ gathering of subjects, extending ■■■ three ■■ four years, collected in 1788, and issued as Rowlandson's Imitations of Modern Drawings, folio; including imitations of the styles of Gainsborough, Wheatley, Mortimer, Barrett, Gilpin, Bartolozzi, Zucchi, Cipriani, &c.

In 1786, Rowlandson supplied G. Kearsley, the publisher of those well-known satirical effusions of Dr. Wolcot, The Poems of Peter Pindar, with illustrations to the first volume of the quarto edition of these familiar works.

This publication ■■■ continued the next year. In ■■ burlesque strain, Rowland- ■■■ also ■■■ out with twenty illustrations, the drawings suggested by Collings,¹ caricaturing passages in Boswell's Journal of ■■ Tour in the Hebrides, published by E. Jackson, small folio (1786). Our artist further supplied certain plates in parody of incidents in the Sorrows of Werther, also from suggestions by Collings, who designed a capital series of drolleries in travesty of passages literally extracted from Lord Chesterfield's Polite Letters.

G. and J. Robinson, in 1790, published the results of ■■ trip to Brighton, which the artist had enjoyed in company with his friend, the frequent companion of his wanderings and frolics, Henry Wigstead, Esq., the sitting magistrate at Bow Street—An Excursion to Brighthelmstone made in the year 1782, by Henry

¹ The original sketches of this series ■■■ recently bequeathed ■■ the South Kensington Museum, where they are attributed ■■ Bunbury: a contemporary advertisement (1786) announces the designs to the forthcoming Journal of a Tour ■■ the Hebrides to be furnished by Collings and Rowlandson.

Wigstead and Thomas Rowlandson, with eight engravings by Thomas Rowlandson, oblong folio.

There also appeared, in this and the following years, a series of Miniature Groups and Scenes, published by M. L., Brighthelmstone, and H. Brookes, Coventry Street, London; and a series of Sheets of Picturesque Etchings, published by S. W. Fores. Rowlandson also furnished book-plates, octavo, to the series of novels published by I. Siebbald, Edinburgh; among the works thus illustrated we must particularise the novels of Fielding and Smollett.

The succeeding year (1792) the artist also contributed illustrations, in large size folding plates, designed after suggestions by Henry Woodward, in a quarto edition of Smollett's Novels. Cupid's Magic Lantern, with illustrations, etched by Rowlandson, also after designs by Henry Woodward, published in 1797.

The Comforts of Bath, and the folio Views of London, belong to 1798. The year the of W. Wigstead, Charing Cross, appears as the publisher of the following works:—

Annals of Horsemanship, with seven copperplates by Henry Bunbury, Esq. Engraved by Thomas Rowlandson.

The Academy for Grown Horsemen, with twelve copperplates, by Henry Bunbury, Esq. Engraved by Thomas Rowlandson.

Love in Caricature, with eleven plates by Thomas Rowlandson.

The handsome and expensively got-up publications inaugurated by Mr. Ackermann, began to occupy our artist in 1799. The first of this well-executed series, with which Rowlandson connected, a set of plates, accurately coloured in fac-simile of the original drawings, in square folio, described as,

The Loyal Volunteers of London and Environs, with eighty-seven plates, designed and etched by Thomas Rowlandson.

Martial ardour being the key-note this year, when foreign invasion menaced our shores, Henry Angelo and Son, who were appointed fencing-masters to the Light Horse Volunteers of London and Westminster, collected a series of subjects which the artist had prepared under their direction, and issued the results of their joint ingenuity as a supplement to the elder Angelo's Treatise on Fencing, under the title of, Hungarian and Highland Broadsword Exercise, with twenty-four plates designed and etched by Thomas Rowlandson, oblong folio.

Another publication, issued by Ackermann in 1799, appeared as Delineations of Nautical Characters, in plates by Thomas Rowlandson.

In 1800, the results of an excursion in North and South Wales, undertaken in concert by the author and artist, were given to the public under the following description: Remarks on a Tour to North and South Wales in the year 1797, by Henry Wigstead, with plates by Thomas Rowlandson, Pugh, Howitt, &c. Published by W. Wigstead, Charing Cross.

Rowlandson also supplied some illustrations to The Beauties of Sterne, a selection of choice passages from the works of that author.

A series of Views in Cornwall, Dorset, &c., appeared as a separate publication in 1805. The artist contributed serious book-plates to an edition of the Sorrows of Werther, in 1806. A smaller edition of the witty Annals of Horsemanship and Academy for Grown Horsemen (portions of which were attributed to the pen of the convivial Captain Grose, the well-known antiquary, author of The Military Antiquities, etc.—the original design of the work with the illustrations belonged to Henry Bunbury) was issued in a cheap form by Thomas Tegg in 1800, the etchings being executed in a reduced form by Thomas Rowlandson, and published under the title of An Academy for Grown Horsemen and Annals of Horsemanship, by Geoffry Gambado, octavo. A collection of plates portraying The Miseries of Human Life, consisting of fifty etchings by Thomas Rowlandson, small folio, was published in a reduced form the same year.

The principal work, however, which appeared in 1804, was, and must remain, a fitting instance of the enterprise and good taste of Rudolph Ackermann, his liberal employment of artists whose abilities were of the first order, while demonstrating the popularity of his publications, which could guarantee the most considerable outlays, with a successful return of the capital invested.

We refer to the splendid Microcosm of London, or London in Miniature, with 105 illustrations by Pugin and Rowlandson, in three volumes, quarto. An extended notice of this valuable series is given in its proper place in this volume, under the description of works for 1808; although we believe the actual preparation of the plates extended over several years.

We have also to notice:—

The Caricature Magazine, or Hudibrastic Mirror, published by Thomas Tegg, and continued to 1810, 386 plates, in five volumes, oblong folio.

The Art of Ingeniously Tormenting, with illustrations by Rowlandson and Woodward, octavo; published by Thomas Tegg, Cheapside, 1808.

A Lecture on Heads, by George Alexander Stevens, with twenty-five illustrations by Rowlandson and Woodward, octavo, published by Thomas Tegg, Cheapside, 1808.

Chesterfield Travestie; or School for Modern Manners, with ten caricatures engraved by Rowlandson from drawings by H. Woodward (who supplied the letterpress), duodecimo, ■■■ also published by Thomas Tegg, Cheapside. 1808.

In 1809, appeared numerous book-plates supplied by the artist ■ publishers. Thomas Tegg issued ■ edition of Sterne's Sentimental Journey, and The Beauties of Sterne, in ■ separate volume; both embellished with caricatures by T. Rowlandson. This gentleman also published ■ edition of The Surprising Adventures of the renowned Baron Munchausen, with ■■■■■ original engravings by Thomas Rowlandson; The Annals of Sporting by Calab Quisem, with illustrations by Rowlandson and Woodward; Advice to Sportsmen, selected from the Notes of Marmaduke Markwell; with sixteen illustrations by Rowlandson; The Trial of the Duke of York, with Rowlandson's collected caricatures on the subject, in two volumes; Investigation of the Charges brought against H.R.H. the Duke of York, &c., with fourteen portraits by Rowlandson, two volumes; and Butler's Hudibras, with five illustrations by William Hogarth, engraved by Thomas Rowlandson.

Beresford's Antidote to the Miseries of Human Life, octavo, is also advertised in 1809.

The Pleasures of Human Life, by Hilari Benevolus ■ Co., with five plates by Thomas Rowlandson, &c., was published by Longmans, 1809.

It was in 1809 that Ackermann projected his Poetical Magazine, royal octavo, which, it ■■■ arranged, should appear in consecutive monthly parts, ■ a means of affording his friend, the artist, substantial and progressive employment. The generous thought which prompted this enterprise was fittingly rewarded by the successful reception this venture secured ■ the hands of the public, and the patrons of Ackermann's 'Repository of Arts.' The Poetical Magazine ■■ quite ■ feature amongst novel publications; the famous plates supplied by Rowlandson (two monthly), and the ■■■■ felicitously written up to the caricaturist's designs by William Coombe, under the title of The Schoolmasters' Tour, and introducing the highly popular Doctor Syntax, formed the only important contributions to the Magazine, which came to ■ conclusion (at the fourth volume), with the end of the first Picturesque Tour.

The ■■■■ which attended the appearance of the familiar Tour was altogether beyond the expectations of either publisher, artist, or author. The etchings ■ the plates to The Poetical Magazine ■■■ worked fairly away and renewed. In 1812, The Tour of Doctor Syntax in Search of the Picturesque, with thirty-one illustrations by Thomas Rowlandson, ■■■ published in a separate form in royal octavo, ■ fresh ■ of the much-admired plates, with but the slightest variations, being prepared expressly, and these in turn proved insufficient to supply the number of copies demanded by the delighted public. The Tour had a still larger success in its independent form, and several editions appeared in the same season; the request continued for years, and was sufficiently encouraging to induce the projectors to follow it up with a new series, The Second Tour of Doctor Syntax, in Search of Consolation, with twenty-four illustrations by Thomas Rowlandson, which also appeared in monthly parts, and was issued in a collected form in one volume, royal octavo, in 1820. A third tour, in Search of a Wife, was ventured in 1822, but this was evidently intended to be the final sequel, for the hero, 'Doctor Syntax,' is removed from life's stage at the close.

Returning to Rowlandson's successive contributions of book-illustrations, we find a satirical work, Munchausen at Walcheren issued in 1811; and a Tale of the Castle (Dublin), published by Stockdale in 1812, and Petticoat Loose, a Fragmentary Poem, illustrated with four plates by Thomas Rowlandson, quarto.

The artist also issued a series of Views of Cornwall in the form of an independent volume the same year.

Mr. Ackermann had introduced, many years before, an illustrated Miscellany to his subscribers, which was a long and highly successful career, under the title, borrowed from the circumstances of its publication, of Ackermann's Repository of Arts, Literature, Fashion, and Manufactures.

In the pages of this admirable magazine were given many continuous contributions of a valuable and interesting character, the contents being as diversified as the description of the undertaking. Among the serials were many essays of merit, which, in the projector's opinion, were entitled to the distinction of separate publication, and, at intervals, the discriminating proprietor of the Repository selected various series of articles by his best qualified and most respected colleagues in the work, and re-issued their contributions, with the enhanced attraction of fresh pictorial embellishments, in separate publications. In this manner a succession of Letters from Italy, which had appeared in the Repository, between 1809 and 1813, furnished by Lewis Engelbach (who supplied reviews of music; it has been said his criticisms may be usefully studied by the most successful living contributors to the press), was republished in 1815 in one volume, royal octavo, as Letters from Naples and the Campana Felice, with seventeen illustrations by Thomas Rowlandson.

Another deserving work, published by R. Ackermann, in the same finished style, with coloured engravings in aquatint, delicately completed by hand ■ resemble water-colour drawings, as were the major part of the illustrations to this series, appeared under the title of Poetical Sketches of Scarborough, with twenty-one illustrations by J. Green ; etched by Thomas Rowlandson, 1813.

In 1815 ■ published The Military Adventures of Johnny Newcome, with fifteen illustrations by Thomas Rowlandson, royal octavo, printed for Patrick Martin, 198 Oxford Street. This work is written in Hudibrastic metre, by 'An Officer' in imitation of the flowing lines supplied by Coombe to the Tours of Doctor Syntax. Another volume (1815 and 1816) ■ published by Thomas Tegg, Cheapside, also composed after the model of the same easy versification, under the description of The Grand Master, or Adventures of Qui Hi in Hindostan, a Hudibrastic poem in eight cantos, by Quiz, illustrated with twenty-eight engravings by Thomas Rowlandson.

The principal triumph of ■ artist's later years appeared in 1815 and 1816, Rowlandson inventing the subjects, and Coombe supplying the descriptive versification, as was their usual method of proceeding in the entire succession of publications, undertaken under this artistic and literary co-partnership, and issued by R. Ackermann.

We refer to the Dance of Death, which had first been offered the public in monthly parts under the old and highly successful system, between 1814 and 1816. This production, which repays the ■ careful consideration, received a flattering reception, and, in spite of the grim nature of the subject, enjoyed surprising popularity, and added considerably to the reputation of those concerned in its appearance. We have ■ hesitation in recording our impression that the ingenuity and invention displayed in the seventy-two plates illustrative of the Dance of Death ■ considerably in advance, in point of invention, of the pictures supplied to its more genial and popular rival Doctor Syntax. Both artist and author had arrived at ■ period of mature experience, which qualified and disposed them to bring their finest faculties to the treatment of this melodramatic theme, in which they must have discovered morbid fascinations ; since it has enabled them to rise above their average efforts. As we have noticed, although the conception is monumental, not ■ say sepulchral, in its characteristics, and ■ occasions, ghastly in its humour, the result is ■ masterpiece ■ the memories of Rowlandson and Coombe ; the fires of their early inspirations ■ rekindled from their decline ; and the Dance of Death has always impressed us as the last flicker of expiring genius ; a fitting memorial of the vast and almost forgotten faculties of the projectors.

A fuller account of this impressive and truly remarkable work, will be found under the year 1810, where ■ have endeavoured to do justice ■ the exceptional qualities of performance which, in our modest conviction, surpasses any previous illustration of the same subject.

In 1816 Rowlandson commenced a series of charming little pictures designed in outline, avowedly intended as an assistance to landscape-artists in the direction of suggesting, and supplying animated groups of figures, suitable for introduction into drawings. The etchings were executed with exceptional neatness, and spirit, and the entire collection is highly interesting; it appeared under the title of The World in Miniature, figure subjects for Landscapes, Groups, and Views, and was published by Mr. Ackermann at 'The Repository.' A series of a similar description commenced under the same designation by Rowlandson in 1821, and finished by W. H. Pyne in 1826; the latter somewhat diffusive, if it extended to 637 parts, as is told.

Our artist's illustrations of the Beauties of Tom Brown belong to 1809.

Rowlandson also contributed a frontispiece to another of Tegg's publications in 1816, The Relics of a Saint, by Ferdinand Farquhar.

Rowlandson found a congenial exercise for his skill, taste, and mirth-imparting qualities in the illustration of Oliver Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield, in 1817, when the famous tale re-appeared, embellished with twenty-four designs by the artist. Mr. Ackermann was induced to republish this delightful story as a vehicle for the display of the delicate humoristic, and more refined qualifications of the caricaturist (who, by the way, had almost ceased to deserve this epithet).

Nothing could be artless than the pathos of this fiction, its simple humour is fresh, and Rowlandson has executed his portion of the undertaking in a congenial spirit, indeed the happy impulses of the author spontaneously embodied in the picturesque designs.

The success of the Dance of Death was so considerable that the publisher endeavoured to share its popularity with another work. The two volumes constituting the first work were, however, executed in a superior manner; and pains were taken to bring the plates to the utmost perfection, as reproductions of the original drawings, than the publisher's with later publications. The Dance of Life, illustrated with twenty-eight coloured engravings by Thomas Rowlandson, published by R. Ackermann, royal octavo, appeared in 1817, and although fairly executed, neither the conceptions of Rowlandson, nor the verses of Coombe, rose above the commonplace; it is evident that the sentiment which had inspired their gifted faculties in the former subject found no revival in the present volume, which is somewhat disappointing after the talent which is manifested in its predecessor.

A pendant ■ the Military Adventures of Johnny Newcome ■ issued in 1818 as The Adventures of Johnny Newcome in the Navy, ■ poem in four cantos, with sixteen plates by Rowlandson from the author's designs, by Alfred Burton, published by Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers' Hall Court, Ludgate Hill. More attention ■ paid ■ the artistic preparation of the succeeding portion of The Second Tour of Doctor Syntax in Search of Consolation, with twenty-four illustrations by Thomas Rowlandson, royal octavo, which Mr. Ackermann introduced ■ the public in ■ collected form as the companion to the popular first volume in 1820.

Rowlandson also furnished illustrations to certain pamphlets ■ chapbooks in 1819; we may particularise ■ under the title of Who killed Cock Robin?—a tract ■ the Manchester Massacre, published by John Cahnac. We have also ■ notice his contribution to ■ chapbook which appeared the ■ year, ■ Female Intrepidity, or the Heroic Maiden.

The ■ year appeared Rowlandson's Characteristic Sketches of the Lower Orders; intended ■ ■ Companion to the New Picture of London containing fifty-four coloured plates, printed by S. Leigh, 18 Strand, 1820.

Another contribution, A Tour ■ the ■ of France, drawn from the excellent serial publication, 'Ackermann's Repository of Arts, Literature, Fashion, and Manufactures,' originally supplied to its ■ in instalments between the years 1817 and 1820, was republished in ■ completed form in 1821, with additional attractions, in the way of fresh embellishments, by the unflagging hand of ■ artist, under the title of A Journal of Sentimental Travels in ■ Southern Provinces of France, illustrated with eighteen coloured engravings from designs by Thomas Rowlandson, royal octavo, published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.

A French version of 'Doctor Syntax's Tour in Search of the Picturesque,' Le Don Quichotte Romantique, ■ Voyage ■ Docteur Syntaxe à la Recherche ■ Pittoresque et du Romantique, also appeared in Paris this year, with twenty-eight illustrations, drawn ■ stone, after the original designs of Rowlandson, by Malapeau, lithographed by G. Engelmann.

The final complement of 'The Tours,' prepared under the ■ auspices ■ the earlier peregrinations, reached completion as ■ additional volume in 1822, and the monthly instalments were then reissued in a collected form to join the two predecessors ■ The Third Tour of Doctor Syntax in Search of ■ Wife, with twenty-five illustrations by Thomas Rowlandson, royal octavo, published by R. Ackermann.

A further instance of the universal popularity enjoyed by The First Tour of Doctor Syntax in Search of the Picturesque ■■■ afforded, in 1822, by the appearance of ■■■ edition translated into German and freely adapted ■■■ Die Reise des Doktor Syntax ■■■ das Malerische an Frusuchen with Rowlandson's famous illustrations imitated on stone and lithographed by F. E. Rademacher, Berlin.

The interest which it ■■■ found, on experience, still surrounded the grotesque prototype Dr. Syntax, induced the energetic projectors—publisher, artist, and author—under their old, well-defined relations, to venture on a farther extension of the familiar framework, and a fresh volume, which had, like the preceding publications, found its way to the public in monthly instalments, was inaugurated in 1822 under the description of The History of Johnny Quæ Genus: The Little Foundling of the late Doctor Syntax—a poem by the author of The Three Tours (William Coombe)—embellished with twenty-four coloured engravings by Thomas Rowlandson.

The ■■■ year ■■■ artist issued another distinct volume of landscape subjects of his execution under the title of Rowlandson's Sketches from Nature; ■■■ collection of seventeen plates, drawn and etched by the artist and aquatinted by Stradler. Crimes of ■■■ Clergy, ■■■ octavo volume, with ■■■ plates by ■■■ artist, also appeared in 1822.

As a further proof that the numerous editions in royal octavo of the illustrious schoolmaster's wanderings ■■■ insufficient ■■■ satisfy the requirements of his patrons, Mr. Ackermann offered the public ■■■ fresh copy, in three volumes 16mo, of The Three Tours of Dr. Syntax, Pocket Edition, with all Rowlandson's plates, executed ■■■ ■■■ smaller scale to suit the convenience of enthusiasts, who might require to carry the volumes about with them ready for immediate reference, ■■■ for perusal ■■■ their travels and ■■■ odd moments, if such an opportunity should be in request.

In 1825 Charles Molloy Westmacott, ■■■ intimate friend of the caricaturist, in whose company we learn he visited Paris, thought proper to edit ■■■ publication under his pseudonym of 'Bernard Blackmantle,' a collection of whimsical ■■■ from the press, which had appeared in print in the previous season. The description of his production is as follows: The Spirit of the Public Journals for the year 1824, with Explanatory Notes. Illustrations on wood by T. Rowlandson, R. and G. Cruikshank, Lane, and Findlay. London; published by Sherwood, Jones, and Co., Paternoster Row, 1825. Our artist contributed eleven highly humorous cuts to this publication, his drawings being engraved ■■■ wood—a novel process as far as the designs usually supplied by Rowlandson ■■■ concerned.

A notable plate ■■■ furnished by the caricaturist in 1825 to The English

Spy, a work also produced under the auspices of 'Bernard Blackmantle,' after the description of the better-known Life in London. The major part of the plates are due to the hand of Robert Cruikshank. Rowlandson's name is given on the title-page as having contributed a portion of the illustrations on wood, but the only example of his skill which have been able to identify as an adaptation of his drawing (now the property of Mr. Capron), The Life School at the Royal Academy, which he originally presented to his old friend John Thomas Smith, of the British Museum. Plate 32.—R. A—ys of Genius Reflecting the True Line of Beauty at the Life Academy, Somerset House, by Thomas Rowlandson; and this illustration is undeniably the most interesting to be found in the entire volume of the two octavo volumes of which Mr. Westmacott's English Spy is composed; further particulars of this subject are given under the year 1825.

After the caricaturist's death in 1827 the admirable publications, of which his coloured plates formed the principal attractions, were discontinued; the taste of the public had changed. Wood blocks and steel plates came into fashion.

Cheap annuals illustrated with woodcuts came into favour for a season, until the appearance of the more elaborately prepared 'Gift Books,' with fine steel engravings, 'Keepsakes,' 'Gems,' &c., subsequently took their place. The folios of Mr. Ackermann were still sufficiently rich in studies by Rowlandson to furnish the framework for a fresh publication. A choice selection made from the large collection of original drawings, published and unpublished, which still remained, after the artist's decease, in the possession of the indefatigable proprietor of the 'Repository'; and these sketches, which of necessity, for the most part, represented Rowlandson's declining period, when his drawings became looser in execution and less picturesque in point of subject, were selected as the materials for a new venture, with a departure from the old popular style of reproduction in facsimile of the artist's pictures coloured by hand.

The subjects culled from Mr. Ackermann's portfolios were redrawn on a reduced scale, either as a whole, or striking portions of caricatures, and prominent figures or groups were adapted, transferred to wood-blocks, and put into the hands of an engraver. In cutting the designs a considerable number of the original spirit, with the individuality of execution peculiar to the master, have unfortunately been sacrificed; the engravings are heavy and poor; however, they offer a rough idea of the nature of the studies which happened to remain in the hands of the publisher, and some interest attaches to this circumstance, as the major part of these designs have never been issued on copper.

Mr. W. H. Harrison has engaged to write up to the pictorial sketches, and he has constructed various small fictions founded on the suggestions offered by the engravings; but the entire work is somewhat clumsy in contrivance, both in respects the illustrations and the literary setting intended to assist their interest in the eyes of the public; the editor's inventions are neither original nor brilliant. The title of the annual produced on this compound principle is The Humourist, a Companion for the Christmas Fireside, embellished with fifty engravings, exclusive of vignettes after designs by the late Thomas Rowlandson: published by R. Ackermann, 96 Strand, and sold by R. Ackermann, junior, 191 Regent Street, 1831. The Humourist contained sixty-seven illustrations in all; the titles of these, and a brief description of the various subjects, will be found at the close of the present volume, under the year 1831.

Although Rowlandson is so well known as an artist, no fitting memorials of his are extant; and while, as we have related, the task of discovering a collection of works by the artist, worthy of illustrating his exceptional abilities, is surrounded by unforeseen difficulties, the operation of culling personal traits, or records of the life and adventures of the caricaturist, demands greater extensions of patience. Nothing short of sincere appreciation for the vast talents of the man, and of a lasting conviction of the original qualities of his works, could have encouraged the writer to prolong his researches, the chances in this of alighting on any discoveries of note being so problematical.

The person of Rowlandson is familiarly recognised amongst his contemporaries from his youth, when he was first admitted as a student to the schools of the Royal Academy (about 1770), through his diversified fortunes, till his death, which occurred on April 22, 1827.

His figure, as he learned, was large, well set-up, muscular, and above the average height—in fact, his person was a noticeable one; his features regular and defined, his eye remarkably full and fearless, his glance being described as penetrating, and suggestive of command; his mouth and chin expressed firm-

SHARPERS, OR THE DECEITFUL.

Old Trusty, with his Town-made Friends,
 To gentle sleep himself commends,
 With Tray upon his knees,
 Whilst Tom, ■ son, all eager, gaping,
 Expects each ■ he'll be scraping
 The treasure up ■ ■

Meanwhile the Harpy Tribe are plotting,
 By forcing liquor, winking, nodding,
 To cheat the youth unlearn'd,
 Who, to his cost, will quickly ■
 Nor watch, ■ money, left behind,
 And Friends ■ Sharpers turn'd

ness and resolution; the general impression conveyed ■ ■ stranger by his countenance, which ■ ■ undeniably fine and striking in its characteristics, was that of the inflexibility of the owner.

Two ■ three portraits of the caricaturist ■ traceable, besides numerous burlesque transfers of his ■ ■ effigy ■ his imaginary personages. In common with Cruikshank, Thackeray, and many other humorists of the brush and etching-needle, he ■ prone ■ introduce the presentment of his own lineaments in whimsical juxtapositions. The ■ ■ generally recognised likeness, from which a separate plate has been published by Mr. Parker, occurs in ■ clever eccentric drawing, exhibited by the artist at the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1787, under the title of Countrymen and Sharpers (No. 555).

This subject was subsequently engraved by J. K. Sherwin, whose portrait also figures therein, in the person of the pigeon, while Rowlandson has chosen ■ represent himself ■ the leading sharper, he who, with blustering front, is fleecing the simple youth ■ cards, in defiance of his well-accepted reputation for rigid integrity; for although the gaming table long held the caricaturist ■ enslaved votary, ready to make the most reckless sacrifices to tempt the fickle favours of the gambler's fortune, it is recorded by those of his acquaintances who have mentioned this disastrous failing (which by the way he shared with all the wealthy, distinguished, and witty celebrities of his day), and deplored the havoc it made with his means, and professional pursuits, that his sense of honour was ever of the keenest, his word was always regarded as sufficient security, and he possessed ■ delicacy of feeling, and a sense of independence, which would not allow him to remain under a debt or an obligation.

At the time Rowlandson sent his drawing of *Countrymen and Sharpers*¹ for exhibition, he ■ 31 years of age, and according to the portrait, looks manhood personified, with a fine comely figure, and ■ face that imprints itself on the recol-

¹ A somewhat different version of ■ origin of this caricature is given in the Memoirs of John Bannister, Comedian, by John Adolphus (8vo., 1839): "His friend and fellow-student Rowlandson was, unhappily, much addicted ■ ■ of chance, ■ Bannister used ■ ■ ■ with him ■ the subject with amiable but ineffectual perseverance. On ■ of these occasions John ■ ■ ■ Smith, the engraver, admonished Bannister on the inutility of his efforts. "You may ■ ■ your sympathy and advice also," he said; "for that Tom Rowlandson ■ ■ is, ■ ■ ■ will ■ incurable." The artist, in merry revenge, brought ■ a print called Hawks and a Pigeon, in which Smith, endowed for the occasion with a most villainous aspect, the very personation of a sharper and ■ knave, exhibited conspicuously.

"By ■ of reprisal, Smith produced a well-known and popular engraving, in which Rowlandson and some others ■ represented as confederates ■ fleecing ■ innocent. Bannister lent ■ aid in forming ■ ■ ■ and, putting ■ for the occasion a face from which all appearance of ■ ■ was effectually banished, ■ for the young dupe. Parsons on seeing ■ production said: "Why, Jack! you ■ ■ ■ of your fraternity that ■ should have selected for the model of ■ ■ ■ Why, when you were ■ ■ ■ Cupid ■ ■ ■ green-room, Kitty Clive, who was ■ apt ■ mince matters, used ■ ■ ■ you looked ■ innocent ■ a little sucking devil."

lection, his hair in a profusion of wavy tresses, worn long, and 'clubbed' as was the fashion of the period. His bold and piercing eyes set under massive and somewhat prominent brows.

The next attributed portrait belongs to 1799, when Rowlandson was 43 years of age. In the design, An Artist travelling in Wales, the result of a journey he made with his friend, the convivial Henry Wigstead, he has represented himself, with a due allowance for burlesque, looking older than his years; the long hair is still there, but its curls are thinned, time and a struggle with seasons less rosy than his youth of many fortunes, telling on the outward man, but the brows, eyes, mouth and chin have diminished nothing of their resolute characteristics—indeed, they are more marked—and the strong nervous figure is beginning to look gaunt.

The Chamber of Genius appeared in 1812 with the appropriate quotation:—

Want is the scorn of every wealthy fool;
And genius in rags is turned to ridicule.—Juv. Sat.

The head of the caricaturist is strongly defined, the shoulders of the gifted occupant of a garret, and the likeness is just what might be supposed from the countenance, as given in 1787, viewed through the intervening quarter of a century of struggles, and disenchantments, when cares of the hour, and incidental anxieties, touching provision for the future, had commenced to take the place of the artist's original careless hardihood.

The last portrait to which we shall at present refer is by another hand; and was sketched when the health of the caricaturist was a grave source of apprehension, since we learn that during the last two years of his life he was a severe sufferer. It represents the figure of a large and powerful-looking old gentleman, of impressive presence; the main characteristics, and the marked profile have gathered force with increasing years, the brows are firmer, and the features defined; this croquis of the veteran drawn by his old friend, and erst fellow-pupil, John Thomas Smith, the keeper of the drawings and prints in the British Museum, and the study taken while the caricaturist was looking over some prints, of his visits to the treasures in his friend's department. The sketcher, who has written the circumstances under which it was taken, below the portrait, has given Rowlandson's age as seventy,—within a year, in fact, of his death. The caricaturist's flowing locks are considerably shorn by the hand of the inevitable mower, and his penetrating eyes do not disdain the assistance afforded by a pair of huge tortoiseshell-rimmed spectacles, in which they are framed; but far from the visible flight of time goes, regarding the outward man, he might be assumed to possess powers of vitality sufficient to carry him over another score years.

If our memory does not deceive us, a sketch of the caricaturist's figure, from the life, and drawn in chalks, was exhibited some time ago at Bethnal Green, in the Loan Collection, formed under the auspices of the Science and Art Department.

We learn that the artist, who is perhaps the most popularly recognised practitioner of the caricature branch, was born in the Old Jewry, in July 1756, that is to say, just a year before his remarkable compeer James Gillray. The members of the Rowlandson family, according to the little we can trace of their personal history, seem to have been highly respectable people of the middle class in life. The name is not of common occurrence. There is a tract relating certain misfortunes which attended two bearers of this cognomen; a pious and worthy couple who in the seventeenth century went evangelising to New England, where they suffered incredible persecutions, and escaped all sorts of dismal tortures amongst the aboriginal Indians, in whose hands they had the mischance to fall; the succession of hardships which they encountered, and their final miraculous deliverance, are duly recorded for the encouragement of the faithful. The narrative, which is simple and circumstantial, forms an item of 'improving reading' without its interest in the present age. There is nothing to prove the relationship of this faithful and much-enduring pair to our caricaturist, beyond the circumstance of the similarity of the name. Rowlandson the elder was assuredly at that time a man of fair substance, as we are informed—'we say a city merchant,' but his disposition, like that of his son, seems to have been tainted with recklessness. Mention is made of an uncle Thomas Rowlandson, who was godfather to the subject of our notice; also, as far as we can discover, connected with mercantile pursuits. This relationship was destined to serve the caricaturist in good stead, if he had only exercised the commonest prudence in husbanding the money which he derived from this connection. We discover that, before Rowlandson had arrived at his man's estate, his chances of inheriting a provision to help him in his way, together with the prospect of any future support, so far as the paternal estate concerned, had melted away; the elder Rowlandson's 'speculative turn' had taken a sinister bent, considerable money had been sunk, and still portentous liabilities had been incurred, 'by experimenting in various branches of manufacture,' which he attempted on an extensive scale for the sake of his command; and, his means becoming exhausted, before the fruition of schemes, pecuniary embarrassments involved his career, and he failed to realise the considerable fortune which his sanguine temperament had anticipated. The natural talents of the son, and the professional training which had cultivated his gifts, were the only contributions he received, attaining manhood, towards his future maintenance, far the help he could derive from his father concerned. Other adventitious aids came the artist's assistance, indeed, in spite of the untoward direction which the previous prosperity of the elder had taken, Rowlandson to a large degree the spoiled child of fortune throughout his early life.

HOW TO TREAT A REFRACTORY

We are not informed whether the paternal was restored to solvency. Among the various 'valuable legacies' which, it is related, fell to the caricaturist's share (only to be scattered broadcast), it is very possible that, in some sort, inheritance from his father formed part of these unexpected 'good gifts.' It seems, although we have no direct records of the remaining relatives, that Rowlandson had a sister, since we learn that his brother-in-law, Howitt, famous as an artist for his delineation of animals, for his spirited hunting subjects, being eminent as a sportsman, rider, and angler; and, like the caricaturist, what of a spoiled child—a wayward genius—of a congenial soul, and vivacious impulses, a trifle given to yield to careless convivial company, or the allure-which the hour might hold forth, oblivious of sober consequences follow.

Thomas Rowlandson, the uncle, had married a certain Mademoiselle Chatterlier, who was, it is evident, a lady with some command of wealth; and from the partiality and indulgence of this aunt, an artist, as he told, 'derived that assistance which his father's want of fortune had withheld.'

Another reference to the family name further appears amongst the list of marriages for September 1800 (Gentleman's Magazine, vol. 70, p. 898), where we find that Thomas Rowlandson, Esq., of Watling Street, espoused Miss Stuart, daughter of George Stuart, Esq., of the Grove, Camberwell, Surrey. It is obvious that Rowlandson senior intended to give his nephew a sound training. As a school-boy, the future celebrity wandered into the precincts of that Soho district to which he afterwards clung in his varying fortunes with the persistence developed by habit.

The caricaturist began to draw his first instalments from the fount of knowledge in the scholastic symposium of Doctor Barvis in Soho Square, 'at that time, and subsequently, an academy of a celebrity.' We are told this establishment was kept by Doctor Barrow when young Rowlandson was pursuing his studies. The respectability of the school, and its soundness as an educational institution, is satisfactorily demonstrated to our mind from the circumstance that the great Edmund Burke had elected to confide his beloved son, with whose training, it is well known, the philosopher took especial pains, to the charge of Doctor Barrow; and Richard Burke, the gentle gifted youth whose untimely death hastened the decease of his patriotic father, was a school-fellow of the artist. J. G. Holman, who was destined to acquire reputation as a dramatic writer and performer, was another school-fellow. It appears that, within the walls of this academy, Rowlandson made the acquaintance of John Bannister, whose inimitable talents were afterwards to delight the town, and whose name is a lasting ornament to the histrionic profession; it was, further, in Soho Square that young Rowlandson and young Angelo, the son of the well-known Henry Angelo (one of the best recognised and most respected foreigners domiciled in London of his day), fencing-master to the Royal Family, became fast and firm friends. The intimacy existing between this worthy trio, dating from these early days, continued steadfastly through life. All these lads were, in different degrees, enthusiasts of the graphic art; Angelo and Bannister had strong predilections for the arts, and both drew as amateurs in their subsequent careers, although, with Rowlandson, they originally meditated following up the artist's profession seriously. As to friend Rolley, like all beginners gifted with the pictorial vein, he could make sketches intuitively before he had learnt to do anything else, as seems the rule with youths who possess the artistic faculty and an imaginative temperament; his powers of fancy directed his hand ■ ■ precociously juvenile age to the practice of exercising his abilities with pencil and pen. 'From the early period of his childhood,' it is recorded, 'Rowlandson gave presage of his future talent;' he could make sketches before he learned to write, and, according to the usual course, 'he drew humorous characters of his master and many of his scholars, before he ■■ ten years old. The margins of his school-books ■■■ covered with these his handiworks.'

Rowlandson's genius ■■■ of the rapid order, his powers were matured before the average of students have sounded the direction of their inclinations. Young Henry Angelo left Doctor Barrow's and Soho Square, for Eton, while Bannister and Rowlandson quitted the seminary of polite learning to follow the arts ■ the Schools of the Royal Academy; here our artist made rapid strides, and gave convincing proofs of his ability, dexterity, and quickness of parts, during the short interval his name was entered as ■ probationer.

In his sixteenth year, somewhere about 1771, Rowlandson had the advantage of being sent to Paris to continue his education; ■■ learn that he 'spoke French like ■ native.' It was his aunt, ■■ Mademoiselle Chattelier, residing in the French metropolis, ■ widow with what would have then been considered, in that capital, a handsome fortune, who invited her hopeful nephew ■■■ to the very centre of gaiety, dissipation, and luxurious refinement—Paris in the latter days of Louis the Fifteenth's reign being ■ very Capua for ■ youth of light and picturesque disposition such as ■■ artist possessed. The impulse for purposeless frivolities, ■■ deleteriously nourished amidst the gaieties of Parisian life, seems to have been kept in tolerable subjection by his earnest intentions to work hard at his adopted profession, which certainly must have sustained Master Rolley during his earlier residence on the Continent, until the cup of pleasure ■■ raised ■ his lips by ■■ unexpected accession of means. The student did ■ wonderful deal of real solid work and thoroughly steadfast application, before, like Moreland, he allowed himself ■ be whirled into the eddy of fashionable distractions; in Paris he was inscribed ■ ■ student in one of the drawing academies there, and his natural abilities, aided by the excellence of the methods practised around him, ■ which his gifts moulded themselves quite naturally, enabled the probationer ■ make rapid advances in the study of the human figure, and laid the foundation for his future excellences. During his first sojourn, which lasted for nearly two years, Rowlandson became ■ perfect French buck, with a decided leaning, however, towards the fine-art section of the condition, and a pride in his professional calling; he learned to draw with fidelity to nature, with the graceful ease, and abandon, and the sparkle of style which marks French pictorial ■ of the period immediately antecedent to the reign of Louis the Sixteenth, the very ideal of luxury and refinement. It is related that, during his abode in Paris, 'he occasionally permitted his satiric talents the indulgence of portraying the characteristics of that fantastic people, whose outré habits perhaps scarcely demanded the exaggerations of caricature.'

Rowlandson returned to London for a season; and, while still a youth in years, his studies ■ the Academy were resumed; his progress ■ ■ ■ marked that he ■ set up ■ a friendly rival to Mortimer, another talented student, who had won the admiration of professors and pupils alike, by his skilful drawings after the nude figure. Our artist seems to have been highly popular with the two sections of academicians and students; the former appreciated his masterly endowments, the latter ■ ■ by his whimsicalities, his spirit of mischief, and the marvellous gift he possessed of turning every situation to comical account in the production of exhaustless graphic satires, which seemed to flow from his pen of their own ■ wilfulness.

John Bannister, who, ■ we have seen, had evinced ■ equal predilection for the graphic art, with powers, however, of lesser brilliancy, ■ then studying in the antique school, their old friendship ■ renewed, and ■ fresh alliance for fun and frolic was straightway entered into.

These hopeful aspirants were ■ great acquisition to the mirth of the schools, but both these eccentric geniuses must have sorely tried the patience of their venerated pastors and masters. The nature of their drolleries, which ■ incessant, is exposed in ■ extract from the Reminiscences of Henry Angelo, who formed the third person of this waggish trio.

'At the period when Wilson held the appointment of Librarian to the Royal Academy, the students ■ accustomed to assemble in the library; Bannister and Rowlandson ■ students, and both being sprightly wights, Wilson kept ■ watchful eye upon their pranks. The one ■ apt to engage the attention of his fellow-disciples by caricaturing the surly librarian, ■ forgetting ■ exaggerate his mulberry ■; whilst the other, born to figure in the histrionic art, a mimic by nature, used to divert them, in his turn, by playing off the irritable 'Old Dick.'

Michael Moser ■■■ keeper ■ Somerset House while Bannister and Rowlandson ■■■ students of the Royal Academy, at which period the drawing-school ■■■ held in a part of the old palace, Somerset House, just behind the site of the present institution. Moser, in virtue of his office ■■ keeper, had apart- ■■■ there, which included accommodations for ■■ housekeeper, and other female domestics.

'Bannister and Rowlandson, as before observed, ■■■ prankish youths. The latter ■■■ gave great offence by carrying a pea-shooter into the life academy, and, whilst old Moser was adjusting the female model, and had just directed her contour, Rowlandson let fly ■■ pea, which, making her start, she threw herself entirely out of position, and interrupted the gravity of the study for the whole evening. For this offence, Master Rowlandson went ■■■ getting himself expelled.

'Bannister, who at this time drew in the plaster academy, not having gained the step that admitted ■■ the drawing from the life, used to amuse Moser with his mimicry, and he was, indeed, a pet of the worthy keeper.

'One evening, observing that the student had vacated his seat ■■ his desk, the keeper ■■■ ■■ seek him, and, hearing ■■ unusual giggling and confusion in the basement storey he descended to learn the cause; when he discovered the young artist romping with the servant-maids.

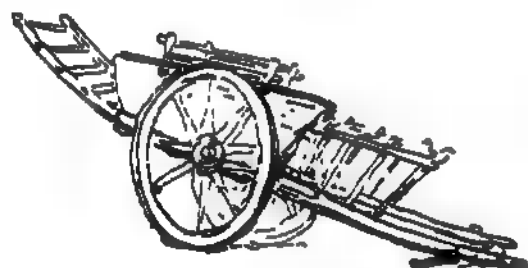

'What ■■■ you doing, sir, hey?' inquired the keeper, taking him gently by the ear; 'why ■■■ you not at the cast? You ■■■ an idler, sir.' Bannister met his reproof with ■■ arch smile, and whispered, 'No, kind sir, I only came down to study from the life!'

In dealing with this part of the subject, every scrap of information has its interest, the resources in this direction being unfortunately most restricted. The task of writing on Gillray, and that within the lifetime of the subject, ■■■ likened ■■ the toil 'of bondsmen commanded to make bricks without straw,' a ■■■ parison with which we have a lively sympathy, as we have realised to the fullest extent the difficulties which surrounded that undertaking. The obstacles to be surmounted in the instance of the first caricaturist ■■■ found to be rather ■■■ vexatious in the ■■■ of the companion volume, taken up under similar auspices. ■■ elucidate the works of Rowlandson, and to trace the artist's career ■■ far as lies within the writer's capabilities. Sixty years ago it ■■■ declared while treating of the first-named genius, in reference to contemporaneous indifference: 'It is a scandal upon all the cold-hearted scribblers in the land to allow such a genius as Gillray ■■ go ■■ the grave unnoticed; and ■■ burning shame that ■■

Angelo has given due prominence to ■■■ recollections of the caricaturist's works and career, and his ■■■■ of familiar intimacy have supplied him with many entertaining details, trivial ■■■ unimportant in themselves perhaps, but very much to the purpose from a biographical point of view, ■■■ aids to the effort of reproducing the subject in his wonted aspect, ■■■ he struck the men amongst whom he passed his life. The spirit of Angelo's Reminiscences will not bear dilution, and so ■■■ think it better ■■■ offer his memoirs of the artist ■■■ they ■■■ published.

'Thomas Rowlandson, John Bannister, and myself, having early in life evinced ■■■ predilection for the study of drawing, ■■■ became acquainted whilst boys, and ■■■■ inseparable companions.

'Everyone ■■■ all acquainted with the arts must well know the caricature works of that very eccentric genius, Rowlandson; the extent of his talent, however, ■■■ a draughtsman is not ■■■ generally known. His studies from the human figure at the Royal Academy were made in so masterly ■■■ style that he ■■■ set up ■■■ rival to Mortimer, whom he certainly would have excelled, had his subsequent study kept pace with the fecundity of his invention. His powers, indeed, were ■■■ versatile, and his fancy so rich, that every species of composition flowed from his pen with equal facility. His misfortune, indeed, was, as I have been assured by capable authorities who noticed his juvenile progress, that of possessing too ready an invention; this ■■■■ faculty, strange as it may seem, however desirable to the poet, often proves the bane of the painter. "The poet," as Milton says, "can build the lofty rhyme," even with a dash of his pen. The painter, however easily he may conceive the structure of ■■■ mighty building—be it ■■■ temple, ■■■ be it a ship—must describe the subject perfectly with all its parts; he must ■■■ to work doggedly, ■■■ the great lexicographer, Johnson, said, and labour at the thing with the patience of the philosopher. Rowlandson ■■■■ ■■■ philosopher, and so his uncontrollable spirit, sweeping ■■■ the prescribed pale, took its excursive flights and caught its thema ■■■ the wing. Hence I think it may safely be averred that he has sketched ■■■ executed ■■■■ subjects of real ■■■■ in his original rapid manner, than any ■■■ artists his contemporaries, and etched ■■■■ plates than any artist, ancient ■■■ modern.

'Few persons—judging from the careless style of drawing and etching which he so fatally indulged in, ■■■ soon, after acquiring the first rudiments of his art—would believe the possibility of ■■■ being the author of some of his earlier designs; for although all ■■■ too slight, yet there ■■■ certain subjects of his composition carried through with a compatibility of style so truly original, and so replete with painter-like feeling, that Sir Joshua Reynolds and Sir Benjamin West pronounced them wonders of art.'

On this same head we have the testimony of Ephraim Hardcastle in the Somerset House Gazette. A certain weight, beyond the mere evidence of partiality, is due to the opinions of such authorities as Henry Angelo and W. H. Pyne, who at least deserve the credit of understanding the subject; both were familiar with the best works of their day, and in the case of the latter we respect the opinion of an artist of wide experience and well-known repute.

'Thomas Rowlandson, the merry wag, he who has covered with his never-flagging pencil enough of charta pura to placard the whole walls of China, and etched so much copper would sheathe the British navy. Of his graphic fun and frolic we have seen, Heaven knows, full many a ponderous folio.

'Master Roley, so friendly dubbed by many an old connoisseur, would have taken higher flights of art had he so willed, for he could draw with elegance and grace; for the design, no mind ever better stored with thought—no genius more prolific. Nothing, even allowing for caricature, could exceed in spirit and intelligence some of the off-hand compositions of this worthy.

'Predilections for outline and the pen have ruined many a genius who would have done honour to the arts. Mortimer, Porter, and many other artists have sacrificed their talents and their fame to the indulgence of doing that with the pen (confound both goose-quill, crow-quill, and the reed!) that should have occupied that fitter instrument the pencil, aforesaid called the painting-brush.'

Angelo affords us occasional glimpses of Rowlandson in Paris, and frequently alludes to the artist's travels on the Continent. It seems, at various stages of his career, he roved about sometimes in search of subjects, at others, in parties of pleasure. We have seen the young student sent to Paris to pursue art; later Angelo finds him there, at nineteen, earnest and hard-working.

'The subjects of his humorous designs were not sought in England alone. He travelled early in life to France, Flanders, and Holland; and stored his portfolios with sketches highly characteristic of the habits and [redacted] of the people, at every town through which he passed. Paris, [redacted] viewed under the old régime, opened a prolific [redacted] for his imitative powers. Nothing [redacted] exceed the fun and frolic which his subjects display, picked up among every class, from the court down [redacted] the cabaret. He mixed in all societies, and speaking French fluently, made himself acquainted with the habits of thinking, as well as those [redacted] acting, in that city, where everything to an English eye bore the appearance of burlesque.

'Hogarth had already pronounced Paris "all begilt and befouled." Rowland- [redacted] found it so; and taking that [redacted] sort of maxim which governed all things, physical as well [redacted] moral, in the polite city, he burlesqued [redacted] the burlesque.

'His drawings of The Italian and The French Family, from which John Raffael Smith made engravings, had great merit. My friend John Bannister had [redacted] of the originals. I remember the last time I saw poor Edwin the comedian (I mean the elder), [redacted] on occasion of his wishing me to procure for him these originals. He was too late in his application, and [redacted] obliged to solace himself with the coloured prints, which were touched upon by the hand of Rowlandson. They were handsomely framed and hung in his dining-room on the first floor of one of the houses on the north-east piazza, Covent Garden. They subsequently became the property of Lord Barrymore.

'It would be difficult to enumerate the many choice subjects which he depicted even in these first tours to the Continent. Those descriptive of Parisian [redacted] would [redacted] be viewed with tenfold interest, as the general external appearance of things [redacted] infinitely [redacted] original and amusing before the period of the commencement of the Revolution than since. Indeed, I can speak of these changes from my [redacted] observation, whilst two years in that city, and in the midst of its ever-varying gaieties, [redacted] than half a century ago.¹

'During my residence there, Rowlandson came over in company with an Englishman of the [redacted] of Higginson, whom he got acquainted with at Dover; [redacted] pleasant companion, but, [redacted] it fell out, one who seemed to live on his wits.

'Their arrival in Paris [redacted] immediately after the death of Louis the Fifteenth [redacted] the moment of the putting [redacted] public mourning (1774). Mr. Higginson had letters of introduction (like Sylvester Daggerwood) to several persons of distinction, and resided at [redacted] hotel adjacent [redacted] my quarters. He [redacted] the valet de place with [redacted] civil [redacted] to request the loan of my black suit, which he knew would fit him to a T. On the written assurance that it would be returned in time for [redacted] to pay ■ promised visit in the evening, ■ readily consented. Rowlandson lost sight of him for two days and nights ; on the morning of the third day he returned, and I went, not ■ well pleased, to demand restitution, when ■ entering his apartment, he received me with, " Ah ! ■ ami, is it you ? " seated under the frosting powder-puff of ■ French friseur, having his hair frizzled and powdered à la mode, in my mourning suit. Rowlandson sketched the group, and subjoined ■ motto, " Free and Easy." I had many of the drawings made by my friend Roly at this time.'

¹ This was written in 1832.

It is most likely that our artist's first contribution to the Royal Academy (it ■ the seventh exhibition) arrived from Paris ; in 1775 there appeared, under the catalogue Number 253, a certain drawing entitled Delilah payeth Sampson a visit while in prison at Gaza, by Thomas Rowlandson ; the exhibitor's address is given ' at No. 4 Church Street, St. Ann's.'

This, no doubt, like his contributions up to 1784, ■ of a serious character.¹

From 1777 we find Rowlandson settled down to portrait-painting, his address being given ■ Wardour Street ; his contributions to the Academy were ■ follow :—

- 1777. No. 302. A Drawing.
- 1778. " 259. Portrait of a Young Gentleman, whole length.
- 1779. " 275. An Officer, small, whole length.
- " 276. A Gentleman, ■
- 1780. " 373. Landscape and Figures.
- 1781. " 334. Portrait of a Lady in a fancy dress.
- " 339. Portrait of a Gentleman.

It is improbable, however, that the artist's disposition for change would allow him to vegetate in ■ spot for any length of time, and ■ ■ not surprised ■ discover that his tours to the Continent became frequent ; ■ far ■ we can judge of his extended travels, it appears it ■ in 1778—while his youthful ardour ■ still fresh, when his sprightly faculties had not been jaded by the allurements of fashionable life, and his hand had not been betrayed into the careless execution which determined ■ time after his decisive rejection of serious art for the indulgence of uncompromising caricature—that he went very earnestly to work ; travelling in Flanders and through the cities of Germany ; making clever studies and finished pictures of the incidents of his journeys ; noting the travellers he encountered, their mode of conveyance, the foreign nobility and their equipages,

¹ A correspondent ■ Notes and Queries, who signs S. R. (11th Series, IV., September 11, 1869, p. 224), while alluding ■ this drawing, also ■ having seen a portrait of George III. by Rowlandson, which possessed great ■ merit ; and adds : ' I possess early drawings by him, executed with a fine quill pen, and most tenderly tinted, which are highly refined in style, excellent in drawing, and in elegance and grace may be classed with the productions of Stothard.'

the townsfolks and the country people, coaches, waggon, and, above all, horses (which he then drew with great fidelity and spirit from life), as far as the figure subjects which enlivened his pictures were concerned; while his views were faithful representations of the places he visited, worked out with the completeness of landscape art.

The drawings of this period evince the excellence of his talents. There is sufficient spice of character introduced into the groups, and incidents which give action to his pictures, to raise his subjects above the average treatment, but the comic element is subordinated to the general harmony of the whole conception; and we have every opportunity of forming our opinion, from the numerous interesting series of studies which have come under our attention, that it was not until about 1782 that our artist began to cut himself adrift from the legitimate occupation of his vast abilities in the regions of serious art, for the allurements which the readier exercise of his talents as a caricaturist held out for the indulgence of his eccentric and wayward tendencies. As we have seen, his early bias was undoubtedly towards the simply ludicrous; then intervened his academic training in London and Paris, the maturing of his powers necessitating an immense, and indeed almost incredible amount of sterling hard work, such as fitted him to excel in any branch of his calling he elected to pursue; followed by an attempt towards his establishment as a serious artist and portrait-painter, and then a relapse in the direction of his early impulses. This inclination was fostered by the encouragement of his friends, and the influence of their example. His cronies were, as was most natural, the humorous designers. There was the great and gifted Gillray, the prince of caricaturists, whose works created an impression on the public justified by their remarkable qualities. The friendship of this man, whose reputation was so wide, and whose mastery of the situation appeared extraordinary, encouraged Rowlandson to strike out a pathway in the same direction; bringing original qualifications to bear on this impetus, which in some degree clashed with the strongly marked intentions of Gillray's scathing inventions. There was his constant friend Henry Wigstead, a man of social standing, profusely liberal in his house, a jovial companion out of doors; who, richly endowed with the vein of humorous invention allied his powers of observation, and a refined sense of the beautiful, as well as a ready knack of seizing the comic features of a situation, entrusted his sketches to Rowlandson, that they might be produced in fitting form ; and ■ the proper execution of these whimsicalities Rowlandson willingly lent the full force of his ■■ trained skill. Another amateur of distinction, whose example and influence ■■■ have had considerable weight with ■■ artist, ■■ Henry Bunbury, the caricaturist, ■ ■■■ of family, of means, and, above all, of high culture. The celebrated Bunbury seemed formed expressly to be courted by the most eminent of his contemporaries ; he had married ■■ of the beautiful Miss Hornecks ; the Duke and Duchess of York were delighted with his company ; amongst the brilliant assemblies at Wynnstay, Bunbury's society was the most relished ; Walpole, Garrick, Reynolds, and Goldsmith were constantly laying adulation at his feet, or exchanging gallant little pleasantries with this favoured child of fortune ; West and Reynolds were respectfully solicitous that he should send his contributions ■ the Royal Academy ; the writers of the day ■■■ given to deplore that the occupations of town and country life, the court, the hunting-field, and the ceremony of receiving company ■ his country-house ■ paying visits to the seats of his noble friends, sadly interfered with the exercise of his artistic abilities.

The instance of Bunbury, who was Rowlandson's senior by six years, ■■ doubt had considerable influence upon our artist's career ; the praise and adulation lavished upon the amateur sketches of the man of fashion, and the prophecies which writers ■■ in the habit of recording, that, if

Bunbury had not, from his birth and station, been indifferent to ■■■ monetary advantages, the pursuit of his talents must have infallibly produced him a large ■■■ of fortune (which he did not need, by the way, since his means ■■■ ample) possibly helped to turn Rowlandson from quietly persevering in the less congenial study of portraiture, and induced him to show the public what could be done in the grotesque walk. Nor ■■■ we forget Mitchell the banker, whose friendship was always at our caricaturist's service, his travelling companion to the Continent, where Rowlandson and his patron passed for the veritable representatives of John Bull. There was 'the facetious Nixon,' the pleasant and witty John, 'a choice member of the celebrated Old British Beef-Steak Club, honorary secretary, and sometime providore to that society of native gourmands ;' further, like his friend Bunbury, distinguished as a ■■■ of talent and taste, possessed of original gifts in the humorous department of graphic art, he ■■■ ■■ honorary exhibitor at Somerset House for many years : this gentleman, who had perfected the study of how to get the largest possible amount of enjoyment out of existence, also [redacted] to Rowlandson [redacted] put his drawings into acceptable shape, and to introduce his eccentric pleasantries to the public. Nor [redacted] the well-known amateurs and choice spirits, Woodward and Collings, be omitted from the list of those familiars of the artist who, by precept and example, encouraged him to devote his accomplishments to the comic branch. It is not surprising that the tendency of this influence, allied to the strong original bias natural to our artist, drew him farther away from the steady pursuit of art, and plunged him into the tempting [redacted] of a caricaturist, a pursuit which held out peculiar attractions to an artist gifted with his whimsical inclinations. We must do Rowlandson the credit to admit that, [redacted] the outset, he distinguished himself marvellously. His first contributions, under his changed profession, [redacted] by [redacted] means discreditable to his great qualifications; indeed these drawings, from the successful impression they produced [redacted] the public, appeared to justify the resolution the artist had taken, and to prove that he was evidently [redacted] at home in the fanciful branch than any of his predecessors or contemporaries. In 1784 Rowlandson contributed three somewhat ambitious subjects to the Royal Academy Exhibition; according to the Catalogue No. 462, An Italian Family; No. 503, Vauxhall; No. 511, The Serpentine River.

Vauxhall Gardens, which is possibly the best recognised of Rowlandson's [redacted] aspiring compositions, [redacted] engraved by R. Pollard, aquatinted, to resemble the drawing, by F. Jukes, and published under the auspices of John Raphael Smith, also a convivial companion, [redacted] leading spirit amongst the careless souls who formed Rowlandson's social surroundings; the well-known printseller, who [redacted] 'a jack-of-all-trades' according to his [redacted] admission, [redacted] celebrated for his liberality to artists; he personally practised the arts both of engraving and painting, and he excelled in executing spirited portrait sketches, in crayons, 'miniatures in large' [redacted] they were called, of the fashionable personages of his day.

The Study of Vauxhall is replete with character; the persons of the principal frequenters are, it is believed, portraits of numerous celebrities of the period.

Angelo, in his Reminiscences, which touch upon every topic of the time, among other interesting allusions, recounts the partiality which he and Rowlandson entertained for the popular resort of the past, and the attractions which, according to his admission, its diversions held out to the pair.

'Vauxhall.—I remember the time when Vauxhall (in 1776, the price of admission being then only [redacted] shilling) was [redacted] like [redacted] bear garden than a rational place of resort, and most particularly [redacted] Sunday mornings.

'It was then crowded from four to six with gentry, demireps, apprentices, shopboys, &c. Crowds of citizens [redacted] [redacted] be [redacted] trudging home with their wives and children. ROWLANDSON the artist and myself have often been there, and he has found plenty of employment for his pencil.

'The chef-d'œuvre of his caricatures, which is still in print, ■ his drawing of Vauxhall, in which he has introduced ■ variety of characters known ■ the time, particularly that of my old schoolfellow ■ Eton, Major Topham, the macaroni of the day. One curious ■ he sketched on the spot purposely for me. It ■ this :—A citizen and his family are ■ all seated in ■ box eating supper, when one of the ruffraff in the gardens throws a bottle in the middle of the table, breaking the dishes and the glasses. The old man swearing, the wife fainting, and the children screaming, afforded full scope for his humorous pencil.

'Such night ■ then tolerated ■ become obsolete. Rings ■ made in every part of the gardens to decide quarrels; it no ■ took place in one quarter, than by a contrivance of the light-fingered gentry, another ■ created in another quarter to attract the crowd away.'

Before taking leave of Rowlandson and Angelo, the most agreeable of companions, at Vauxhall, we must add ■ further note of another of their holiday jaunts, once ■ borrowed from the Reminiscences.

'Mrs. Weichsel (Mrs. Billington's mother) was the favourite singer ■ Vauxhall; upon one occasion she had her benefit at the little theatre in the Haymarket. Her daughter and son added considerably to the entertainment that night; though the former could not have been fourteen years old, her execution ■ the pianoforte surprised everyone. The son, then a little boy, played ■ solo on the fiddle in such peculiarly fine style that the audience were both astonished and delighted. Exhibiting his early abilities standing ■ a stool, I ■ present that night with Rowlandson the artist, who made a sketch of him playing, which he afterwards finished for me, and which, within these few years, was within my collection.'

We will leave Rowlandson rejoicing in the popular impression his drawings had produced in the Exhibition of the Royal Academy for 1784, where, as his friends ■ inclined to prophesy, his fame and fortune ■ both assured, and turn ■ the subject of another fortune which ■ to have come into his possession about this period. We have said that the artist ■ a spoiled child of prosperity; his contemporaries record their impression that the indulgences of his aunt, the ex-Mademoiselle Chatterlier already referred to, ■ the kindly patroness of her wayward nephew's budding talents, who supplied him ■ cautiously with money, when he would have been better without it, paved the foundation of those careless habits which attended his manhood; and ■ her inju-ditional generosity his biographer affects to trace that improvidence for which, says our authority, poor Rowlandson was remarkable through life. After this aunt's decease, she left him £1000 thousand pounds, much plate, trinkets, and other valuable property. He then indulged his predilections for a joyous life, and mixed himself with the gayest of the gay. Whilst in Paris, being of a social spirit, he sought the company of dashing young men; and among other evils, imbibed a love for play. He was known in London at many of the fashionable gaming houses, alternately winning and lost, without emotion, till at length he was minus several thousand pounds. He thus dissipated the amount of more than one valuable legacy. It was said of his honour, however, that he always played with the feelings of a gentleman, and his word passed current even when with an empty purse. Rowlandson assured the writer of the memoir which appeared, of his death, in the obituary of The Gentleman's Magazine for June 1827, that he had frequently played throughout a night and the next day; and that once, such was his infatuation for the dice, he continued at the gaming table nearly thirty-six hours, with the intervention only of the time for refreshment, which was supplied by a cold collation, presumably consumed on the spot and during the intervals of play.

This uncontrollable passion for gambling, strange to say, did not pervert his principles. He was scrupulously upright in all his pecuniary transactions, and never avoided getting into debt. He has been known, after having lost all he possessed, to return home to his professional studies, sit down coolly to produce a series of designs, and to exclaim, with stoical philosophy, 'I have played the fool; but,' holding up his pencils or the reed pen with which he traced his flowing outlines, 'here is my resource.' Such was his dexterity of hand, combined with the richest fertility of imagination, and graphic mastery over the movements of the human figure, that in a few hours he produced inimitable pictures, replete with his best qualities of humour, form, and colour, with incredible rapidity; and these ingenious productions, invented in endless variety, were put into circulation, and excited the competition of collectors of drawings and caricatures, who eagerly accumulated every sketch which his facile hand designed, too often under the pressure of the actual necessities of the hour, or the careless effusions of the intervals in his pleasures or dissipations.

Rowlandson's contributions to the Academy in the succeeding years are as follows:—

- 1786. No. 560. A French Family.
- " 566. Opera House Gallery.
- " 575. An English Review.
- " 583. A French Review.
- " 599. Coffee House.

1787. No. 525. The Morning Dram, ■ Huntsman rising.

„ „ 529. Grog on Board ■ Ship.

■ „ 531. French Barracks.

■ „ 555. Countrymen and Sharpers.

It ■■■ about this time that ■■■ caricaturist met with a somewhat disagreeable adventure, which is thus related by his friend Angelo :—

' Rowlandson robbed.—Having walked ■■■ night with Rowlandson towards his house, when he lived in Poland Street,¹ we parted ■ the corner. It ■■■ then about twelve o'clock, and before he got to his door a ■■■ knocked him down, and, placing his knees ■ his breast, rifled him of his watch and money. The next day he proposed that ■■■ should be accompanied by a thief-taker, ■ try to find him out, ■ he ■■■ certain he should know him again. We first repaired ■ St. Giles's, Dyot Street, and Seven Dials, but to ■ purpose. In ■■■ of the night-houses, four ill-looking fellows, des coupes-jarrets, ■ attracted our attention, that whilst we sat over our noggin of spirits, ■ he always carried his sketch-book with him, he made an excellent caricature group of them for me, introducing a prison in the background. An idea may be formed from the caricature, of the different gradations which lead to the gallows—petty larceny, house-breaking, foot-pad and highway robbery; and he afterwards finished it for me in his best style, superior to the greater part of his works; this ■■■ about 1792. The coloured drawing ■■■ was included in my collection, in a room crowded with various subjects, the greatest part caricatures by my old friend Rowly—his general appellation among his friends.

' Our first interview originated in Paris (about 1775); he ■■■ then studying in the French school. Lately, having to dispose of my collection (I may say unique), my friend Bannister purchased it of me, and it ■■■ added to his many choice and valuable drawings of the first masters, which ■■■ ■ very superior that the four thieves ought ■ have esteemed it ■ honour to be placed in such good company.¹

' The next night ■ gentleman was robbed in Soho Square in like ■■■■■. Soon afterwards several suspicious characters ■■■ taken to ■ office then in Litchfield Street, Soho, suspected of ■■■ robberies, and Rowlandson and myself went there out of curiosity, accompanied by many others who had been robbed. They were all placed before us, but none were identified. Rowlandson was particularly called upon to look around him, but to no purpose. One man in particular made himself more conspicuous than all the others, treating his curiosity with contempt, saying, "I defies the gemman to say as how I stopped him any varc." "No; but you are very like the description of the ruffian," answered Rowlandson, "who robbed a gentleman last Wednesday night in Soho Square." This was a thunderbolt to the man, who instantly looked pale and trembled. The gentleman immediately sent for, and he soon entered the room, though there were several for examination, he fixed directly on the man that had been suspected. At the sessions following he was found guilty of robbery, and hanged. This pleased my friend mightily; "for, though I got knocked down," said he, "and lost my watch and money, and did not find the thief, I have been the means of hanging him. Come, that's doing something."

¹ According ■■■ Royal Academy Catalogue, Rowlandson removed from 133 Wardour Street ■■■ Street, Pantheon, between 1786 ■■■ 1787.

We incidentally learn a few particulars of subjects which found their way into Angelo's gallery, the collection which subsequently passed into the possession of his excellent friend Bannister.

'Black and White.—Being fond of the arts and particularly of caricatures, I had by me a great number of Rowlandson's, to some of which I was puzzled to give names. The subject was an old man, at breakfast, seated by the fire, his gouty leg on a stool, and the kettle boiling over; the water is falling on his leg, and he is ringing the bell. The room door is open behind him, and a black servant is kissing the maid, who is bringing in the toast. I requested Theodore Hook to write a title to it, and he put, "Chacun à son goût."¹

¹ The drawing of the four ruffians is now, we understand, in the possession of Mr. William Bates, B.A., &c., and forms part of an interesting collection of caricatures by Rowlandson held by that admirer of his works. See Account of Original Drawings in the Appendix.

We further afforded an opportunity of recording Rowlandson's enthusiasm for his profession. The details of a certain visit he paid, with Angelo, to Portsmouth, and the unflinching manner he exhibited under circumstances which were calculated to distress a less robust constitution, are thus recounted by his friend and travelling companion :—

'The general rumour, after Lord Howe's action on June 1, 1794, was that he would return to Portsmouth. I was anxious to see the sight, for it was expected he would bring the French prizes with him.

'The evening after my arrival, according to promise, Rowlandson the artist joined me.

'The morning following we saw, from the Gosport side, the landing of the French prisoners, numbers of different divisions filing off to the different stations allotted them. As for the wounded, previous to their quitting the boats, carts were placed alongside, and when filled, on the smack of the whip, were ordered to proceed. The sudden jolting made their groans appalling, and must have occasioned the wounds of many to produce an immediate hemorrhage. The sight was dreadful to behold: numbers of boys, mutilated, some not more than twelve years old, who had lost both legs. In the evening we went to Forton Prison. Those who were not in the last engagement were in high spirits in their shops, selling all sorts of toys and devices, made from shin-bones, &c. In one of the sick-wards we saw one of the prisoners, who, an officer told me had been a tall, handsome man, previous to the battle; but, having received a shot that had lacerated his side, a mortification had taken place. He was then making his will; his comrades were standing by, consoling him, some grasping his hand, shedding tears.

'This scene was too much for me, and made such an impression on my mind that I hastened away; but I could not persuade Rowlandson to follow me, his inclination to make a sketch of the dying moment getting the better of his feelings. After waiting some time below for my friend, he produced a rough sketch of what he had seen:—a ghastly figure sitting up in bed, a priest holding a crucifix before him, with a group standing around. The interior exhibited the contrivance of the French to make their prison habitable. When finished, it was added to my collection, a specimen of the shocking sight I beheld at Forton Prison.

'Our curiosity not stopping here, we entered another sick-ward, but the stench and closeness of the place, crowded as it was, prevented me remaining there more than ■ very short time. The ■ day, having seen quite enough, I returned to town. Rowlandson went ■ Southampton, where he made ■ number of sketches of Lord Moira's embarkation for La Vendée. I ■ them afterwards, and ■ delighted, for it appeared he had taken more pains than usual, and he ■ have portrayed them well, from having been on the spot himself ■ the time. The shipping and the various boats filled with soldiers ■ ■ accurately delineated, that I have often since regretted that I did ■ ■ that time purchase them. Mr. Fores of Piccadilly, who had by him many of the very finest drawings executed by Rowlandson in his best days (for latterly they ■ inferior), fortunately purchased them. He ■ ■ of his first and best patrons; and I understand he had twenty-five folio volumes of the most choice caricatures of the last and present centuries, which must have been an invaluable recueil, showing not only what ■ have been, but the age ■ lived in. Had Rowlandson gone with the expedition then landing in La Vendée as ■ draughtsman, the attack ■ Fort Penthièvre, and the incident that followed, would have furnished ■ with many eventful scenes of that fatal expedition.'

¹ The main characteristics of this subject belong to Careless Attention, 1789: a dashing son of fortune taking the place of a black flunkey.

As we have related, Rowlandson was no stranger to the Continent; in the early part of his career he was constantly abroad. We have shown how he studied in Paris; afterwards we find him wandering farther afield, and taking in Germany and the Netherlands. Then ■ are introduced to him ■ ■ of fashion, bowling through the legacies which had fallen to his lot, both in the French metropolis and in London, calmly sitting down to gamble away his fortune by the shortest route with the best will in the world. Anon he accompanies his friend Mitchell the banker on ■ wider tour. Then we hear of his sojourning in Paris with other congenial spirits, and making the most of the passing season with his friends John Raphael Smith, Westmacott, and Chasemore: ■ all these occasions he produced drawings innumerable; his most frequent travelling companion seems, however, ■ have been his steadfast patron the banker, and it ■ this liberal collector who rejoiced in the opportunity of securing the artist's ■ desirable Continental studies. Our oft-quoted authority Angelo, who, happily for those who entertain an interest in the caricaturist, never tires of telling 'little ■ dotes of his chum Roley, in his own familiar ■ ■ relates a few particulars of the figure these worthies made in the eyes of the Monsieurs, amongst whom their visits ■ favourably received.

'Mr. Mitchell, however, possessed the best collection of Rowlandson's French and Dutch scenes. Among those were many in his ■ humorous style, particularly a Dutch Life Academy, which represents the interior of a school of artists, studying from a living model, ■ with their portfolios and crayons, drawing ■ Dutch Venus (a vrouw) of the make, though not of the colour, of that choice specimen of female proportion, the Hottentot Venus, so celebrated as a public sight in London, ■ few years since.

'This friend and patron of Rowlandson, Mr. Mitchell the quondam banker, of the firm of Hodsol and Co., ■ ■ facetious, fat gentleman—one of those pet children of fortune, who, wonderful ■ it may appear, ■ to have proceeded through all the seven ages (excepting that of the lean and slippered pantaloon), without ■ single visit from that intruder upon the rest of mankind, yclept Care. In him centred, ■ rather around him the Fates piled up, the wealth of ■ whole family. He was ever the great gathering nucleus to ■ large fortune. He ■ good-humoured and enjoyed life. Many ■ cheerful day have I, in company with Bannister and Rowlandson, passed ■ Master Mitchell's.'

Under the auspices of this great banker, Rowlandson subsequently made ■ tour to France, and other parts of the Continent. 'His mighty stature astonished the many, but ■ more than the innkeepers' wives, who, ■ his arrival, as he travelled in style, looked at the larder, and then again at the guest. All regarded him as that reported being, of whom they had heard, the veritable Mister Bull. His orders for the supplies of the table, ever his first concern, strengthened this opinion, and his operations ■ his meals confirmed the fact.

'Wherever he went he made good for the house.

'On this tour, Rowlandson made many topographical drawings, in general views of cities and towns; amongst others, the High Street ■ Antwerp, and the Stadt House at Amsterdam, with crowds of figures, grouped with great spirit, though his characters were caricatures.

'The most amusing studies, however, which filled the portfolio of his patron ■ those that portrayed the habits and customs of the Dutch and Flemish, in the interior scenes, which they witnessed in their nocturnal rambles in the inferior streets at Antwerp and Amsterdam. Some of these compositions, drawn from low life, ■ replete with character and wit. One of the most spirited and amusing of these represented the interior of ■ Treischuit, ■ public passage-boat, which was crowded with incident and humour.'¹

Another reminiscence of Rowlandson and Mitchell is found in the Somerset-house Gazette, edited by Ephraim Hardcastle (W. H. Pyne), ■ intimate associate of the caricaturist and ■ member of the artist's circle of friends.

'I look back with pleasure to former days, when old Mr. Greenwood used to hold the print auctions by candle-light, and have a perfect recollection of his good-humour and upright dealing. I well remember, too, a number of artists and amateurs who constantly attended his room, ■ purchase etchings of the old ■■■■ for themselves and friends.

¹ Mr. Henry G. Bohn, ■ well-known publisher, informed the writer that ■ ■ period he had a collection of drawings by Rowlandson, chiefly ■ Continental views, such as the Series in Holland ■ Flanders, ■ for the artist's patron ■ the banker, numbering nearly ■ hundred.

‘Old Parsons, ■ he was called, and young Bannister, the celebrated comedians, ■■■ both collectors and amateur artists : the latter ■■ considered ■■ excellent judge of prints. Rowlandson, the humorous draughtsman, and his friend and patron Mr. Mitchell the banker, of the firm of Hodsons, ■■■ also frequently of this evening rendezvous of artists, amateurs, and connoisseurs.’

John Thomas Smith, the whilom pupil of Nollekens the sculptor (with whose life he favoured the public), and one of Mr. Reid's predecessors ■ Keeper of the Print Room of the British Museum, in his loquacious Book for ■ Rainy Day rambles into the subject of picture sale-rooms, and notes the eccentric characters, collectors, and their individualities, to be met with thereat in his time. On this subject ‘Antiquity Smith’s’ account tallies with that given by Angelo. We have confined our extract to the paragraph which introduces the caricaturist ■ a crony and erst fellow-pupil of the versatile chronicler.

‘I must not omit to mention another singular but most honourable character, of the name of Heywood, nick-named “Old Iron-wig.” His dress ■■ precise, and manner of walking rather stiff. He was an extensive purchaser of every kind of article in art, particularly Rowlandson's drawings ; for this purpose he employed the merry and friendly Mr. Segquier, the picture-dealer, ■ school-fellow of my father's, to bid for him.

‘I shall ■■ close this list by observing that my friend and fellow-pupil, Rowlandson, who has frequently made drawings of Hutchins and his print auctions, has produced ■ most spirited etching, in which not only many of the above described characters are introduced, but also most of the print-sellers of his day.’

The editor of this work has ■■ a drawing by Rowlandson of this very auction, the cognoscenti gathered round the long tables lighted with flickering candles, and peering over the engravings, glasses ■■ nose, while the auctioneer was endeavouring to excite the interest of the company in the prints brought ■ his rostrum.

Before we pass on ■ other contemporaries of the caricaturist, ■■ think it advisable to introduce the reader to the society which Rowlandson shared round the hospitable mahogany of the banker, who, like Wigstead, Nixon, Weltjé, and certain other generous hosts of ■■ artist's acquaintance, appears ■■ have kept open house for the entertainment of choice friends, where the enjoyments of social intercourse were prolonged to the verge of dissipation, and the fun, which enlivened their hours of relaxation, ■■ frequently kept up until the next day was well advanced; the associates being loth to interrupt the pleasures of their sitting, protracted as their gaieties might be considered according to the staid usages of a better regulated age, such as have been taught to regard our

'Mr. Mitchell resided for many years in Beaufort Buildings, Strand, and occupied the house tenanted by the father of Dr. Kitchiner, of eccentric memory. Here, after the closing of the banking-house, he went to retire, and pass a social evening, surrounded by a few chosen associates whose amusements congenial, and whose talent well paid the host for his hot supper and generous wine. Often, even beyond the protracted darkness of a winter's night, he and his convives have it out till dawn of day, and seen the sun, struggling through the fog, from the back windows, shed its lurid ray on the rippling waters of the murky Thames.

'Well do I remember sitting in this comfortable apartment, listening to the stories of my old friend Peter Pindar, whose wit seemed not to kindle until after midnight, at the period of about his fifth or sixth glass of brandy and water. Rowlandson, too, having nearly accomplished his twelfth glass of punch, and replenishing his pipe with choice oro-nooko, would chime in. The tales of these two gossips, told in one of these nights, each delectable to hear, would make a modern Boccaccio.'

Angelo, in his capital chatty Memoirs, relates an anecdote of one of Wigstead's pranks played off on the satirist Peter Pindar, whose trenchant wit spared 'nor friend nor foe;' but, in his turn, Dr. Wolcot did not relish ridicule, especially when it happened to be excited on his expense. It was discovered that, eminently satirical as the bard with his pen, he was not emulous to shine as a wit in colloquial intercourse with strangers, even amongst his most intimate associates. It was asserted, with fidelity, that 'Dr. Wolcot's wit seemed to lie in the bowl of a teaspoon.' 'I could not guess the riddle,' writes the discursive and cheerful author of the Reminiscences, 'until one evening, seated at Mitchell's, I observed that each time Peter replenished his glass goblet with cognac and water, that, in breaking the sugar, the corners of his lips were curled into a satisfactory smile, and he began a quaint story—as if, indeed, the libation begot a new thought.

'Determined to prove the truth of the discovery which I fancied I had made, one night after supper, at my residence in Bolton Row, he being one among a few social guests, I made my promised experiment. One of the party, who delighted in a little practical joke, namely Wigstead, of merry memory, being in the secret, he came provided with small square pieces of alabaster.

Peter Pindar's glass waning fast, Wigstead contrived to slip the fragments of spurious ~~■■■■~~ into a sugar-basin provided for the purpose, when the Doctor reaching the hot water, and pouring in the brandy, Wigstead handed him the sugar-tongs, and then advanced the basin of alabaster. "Thank you, boy," said Peter, putting in five or six pieces, and taking his tea-spoon, began stirring as he commenced his story.

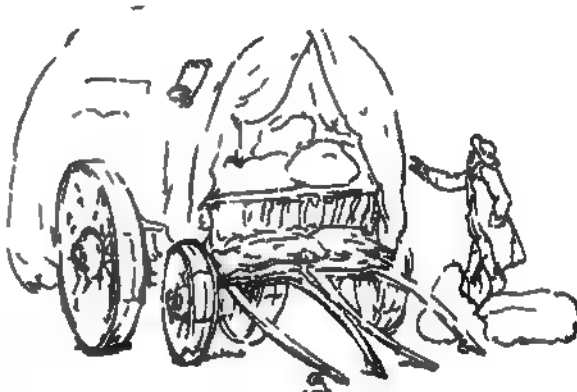

'Unsuspecting of the trick, he proceeded: "Well, sirs,—and so, the old parish-priest.—What I tell you (then his spoon went to work) happened when I ■■■ in that infernally hot place, Jamaica (then another stir). Sir, he ■■■ the fattest man on the island (then he pressed the alabaster); yes, damme, sir; and when the thermometer, at ninety-five, was dissolving every other man, this old slouching, drawling, son of the Church got fatter and fatter, until, sir—curse the sugar! some devil-black enchanter has bewitched it. By ——— sir, this sugar is part and parcel of that old pot-bellied parson—it will never melt;" and he threw the contents of the tumbler under the grate. We burst into laughter, and our joke lost ■■■ the conclusion of the story. Wigstead skilfully slipped the mock sugar out of the way, and the Doctor, taking another glass, never suspected the frolic.'

Let us take a further glimpse of the social meetings which Rowlandson shared in company with Angelo, who duly set down the outlines of the evenings' diversions in his Memoirs. As this anecdote introduces a personage who figures somewhat prominently amidst the more lively records of the period, we must be allowed to say a word or two about the giver of the feast, where ■■■ are admitted by favour and enabled to watch the proceedings from a distance.

Another excellent friend, occasional host, and boon companion of our caricaturist was, as we have mentioned, Weltjé, the Prince of Wales' cook and steward, a German of eccentric proclivities, who ■■■ pretty universally recognised ■■■ character in his generation. The huge person of this worthy is frequently introduced into the social satires of the period; the artistic and literary wags alike delighted to make the figure of the old bon-vivant conspicuous; it seems that Weltjé ■■■ in ■■■ wise offended at this popularity, however unflattering might be the intentions of the wicked wights; he ■■■ a calm humoristic philosopher, whose composure ■■■ not easily deranged, and in return for their mischievous sallies, which only amused him, he made the wits, who grew waggish at his expense, his guests ■■■ his residence Hammersmith Mall; where he kept such a table ■■■ attracted all classes of society, and to which his friends ■■■ ever welcome. Weltjé's culinary accomplishments, united with his hospitable proclivities, rendered him a truly remarkable host; his good humour ■■■ imperturbable, his store of anecdotes inexhaustible, and his German bluntness rather added to the charm of his pleasantries; ■■■ that superfine Sybarite and highly sensitive exquisite, the Heir Apparent, Mr. Weltjé's patron and employer, was glad ■ to dissemble his offended dignity when his precious and immovable cook ■ the assailant. Angelo, who declares he owed many a convivial day ■ the kindness of ■ rough diamond, assures ■ in his Reminiscences: 'Whether ■ Carlton House ■ his own, Weltjé ■ always remarkable for singularity. I have been told that when Alderman Newnham was one day dining ■ Carlton House, the Prince said to him, "Newnham, don't you think there is ■ strange ■ in the soup?" "It appears ■ to me, your highness." "Send for Weltjé." When Weltjé made his appearance, the Prince observed that the soup had a strange taste. Weltjé called to one of the pages, "Give ■ de spoon," and putting it in the tureen, after tasting it several times, said, "Boh! boh! tish very goote," and immediately left the room, leaving the spoon on the table, without taking further notice of the complaint.'

It is not, however, with the worthy Weltjé at Carlton House, but ■ his own villa, that we have to deal. Angelo introduces ■ ■ capital dinner-party which took place at Hammersmith Mall, when the old associates, Rowlandson, Bannister, and Munden, ■ among the guests; Madame Banti the opera-singer, and Taylor, also of the Opera House, with Mr. Palmer of Bath, contributed to make up ■ tolerably festive party. The dinner was long and bien recherché; the dishes choice, and cooked in superior style; the sprightly conversation, in which the company delighted, had been somewhat suspended during the discussion of ■ great variety of entremets, which ■ ■ ■ duly appreciated by all the guests, and especially by Madame Banti, who not only tasted of every dish, but, in addition ■ ■ quantity of strong ale, drank ■ bottle of champagne. The guests were preparing for that flow of wine and conversation which were the agrémens of social intercourse ■ the period. The repast ■ ■ concluded ■ everyone imagined, and nobody felt disposed to touch another morsel, when Weltjé's grand piece of the entertainment made its appearance—a huge boar's head, at which delicacy everyone stared in consternation.

Weltjé plunged into his element, mixing up sauces piquantes at table, of such ingredients ■ oil, lemon, cayenne, and different concomitants.

The guests, already lavishly regaled, were inclined to expostulate. 'Indeed, Weltjé, ■ have had more than enough.' 'Boh!' responds the entertainer, 'I will make you all hungry again ; two-heads gomed to dis gontry, von for me, toder for de Queen, dat de Prince of Bronsvick sent ;' and away proceeded the compounding of sauces. The long interval occupied in Weltjé's culinary preparations ■■■ shortened by droll anecdotes, peculiar to his ■■■ description, introduced for the purpose of distracting the attention. Such ■■■ his account of his adventure ■■ his return home to Hammersmith, in his carriage, from Carlton House. 'Fon I gote to de fust dumbpike beyond Kensington, from town, de goach stobed some time, fon me say, "Godam, ged on : " fon de dumbike say, " Sir, dere be nobody on de bokes." I ■■■ very much frightened, ■■ I did ged up mine-self. The next day gome de goachman : " Pray, sir, fon ■■■ I to ged the carriage ready ? " " Tartifle, what become of you last night ? "' The coachman, it appears, had fallen off the box in a drunken stupor ; unhurt, he had, never troubling himself about his charge, taken a nap all night under ■ hedge, and attended ■ his master the next morning to receive orders ■ coolly as if nothing unusual had happened. The ■■■ piquante is ready by the time the host has raised ■ few laughs ; clean plates are handed round ; a large dish is filled with slices of the boar's head, swimming in provocative mixtures ; and the guests fall to again ; verifying, as Angelo relates, the French proverb that, l'appétit vient en mangeant, or, as Hamlet says, ' As if increase of appetite had grown with what it fed on.' The second repast proved ■ excellent that the plates ■■■ continually replenished. The poets, painters, actors, musicians, and others, who crowded Weltjé's liberal entertainments, with ' those whose superior station ■■■ more suited to ■ palace,' then gave themselves up to unrestrained mirthfulness. The dinner Angelo describes will ■■■ ■ ■ type of the many similar entertainments ■ which ■■ caricaturist assisted. With the dessert Madame Banti became ■■■ what lively, from her repeated libations of champagne, being, ■ Angelo informs us, ' in higher spirits than any French woman I had ever ■■■ With the enthusiasm of ■ true John Bull, she sang " God ■■■ the King," that she might have been heard on the other side of the river. Munden, whom she had never seen before, sang the " Old Woman of Eighty ; " and to give effect to the song, tied his pocket-handkerchief round his head, though his superior humour needed no addition. When he had finished his song, Banti left her seat in ecstasy, and went to the other side of the table, where he and I ■■■ sitting, and ■■ so pleased with his mummery (it could be nothing else, for Joe ■■■ was ■■ Adonis), that she came behind his chair and kissed him ; which, however, did not excite a blush, but an agreeable surprise. What with the songs, the choice wines, the delicious fruits (from Weltjé's hothouse), and the zest given to the entertainment by Banti, it formed such a delightful treat, that the evening passed too quickly, and it ■■■ time to depart long before ■■ ■■ sated with " the feast of ■■■ and the flow of soul." '

To return to the working life of our caricaturist: it must be borne in mind that Rowlandson's journeys were confined to the Continent; from drawings which have come under our attention, we find he must have visited the Lakes: it is highly probable that he paid a visit to Henry Bunbury, who, towards the close of his life, settled at Keswick, where he died in 1811. We also know, from his works, that our artist was familiar with England and Wales: his tours, with his friend Henry Wigstead, have produced many interesting souvenirs; we have described how they travelled in Wales, and how, too, they visited Cheshire, Cornwall, Devon, and Somerset; we find them scampering off to the newly established Brighthelmstone, and to the more old-fashioned watering-places on the coast of Kent. It was at Margate that Rowlandson lost his most congenial associate, who having gone there, in the autumn of 1800, for the benefit of his health, did not live to return; the death of Henry Wigstead was a serious bereavement to the caricaturist, the earliest of those losses of his cherished associates which influenced his spirits considerably.

We can also catch glimpses of Rowlandson on the Scarborough coast, and in Norfolk. Yarmouth seems to have been a favourite spot with him. We find him studying at seaports along the south coast; with Plymouth, Portsmouth, and Southampton he was thoroughly familiar. Of the Thames and the Medway, and the shipping to be encountered thereon in war-time, he has left sketches innumerable; he has visited the fishing spots on the former, and drawn the pretty towns which mark the valley of the river. With London, and its diversified spots of interest, from east to west, and north to south—the centre, and the outskirts alike—he had the most intimate acquaintance. We have already spoken of the drawings he made in the two University cities, and his series of views of the noble colleges.

An Historical Sketch of the Art of Caricaturing was written by the well-known antiquarian J. P. Malcolm, F.S.A., and published in 1813. This book, which might, had the author so willed, have supplied the curious with valuable hints, drawn from personal acquaintance, concerning professors of the art then living, is confined to the briefest recapitulation, so far as concerns contemporary works, the book being retrospective in principle; and it is difficult to discover any allusions of value to those Caricaturists lately deceased or who are still alive. Malcolm's appreciation of grotesque art was somewhat catholic, but he does not seem as familiar as might reasonably be supposed the case, with the masterpieces of the men who were flourishing in his time, or perhaps their chefs d'œuvre were then generally familiar as they need no further recognition. The compiler of the Historical Sketch was evidently an amateur of humorous productions, and could describe the progress of grotesques, but he does not seem to have completely carried out the scheme of his treatise.

We have borrowed a paragraph from this excellent antiquarian, ■■■ instance of his criticisms on the subject of the present volume.

'Rowlandson's Views in Oxford and Cambridge, 1810, deserve notice for the slight and pleasing manner with which he has characterised the architecture of the places mentioned; but it is impossible to surpass the originality of his figures; the dance of students and filles de joie before Christ Church College is highly humorous, and the enraged tutors grin with anger peculiar to this artist's pencil. The professors, in the view of the Observatory at Oxford, are made ■■■ ugly ■■■ baboons, and yet the profundity of knowledge they possess is conspicuous ■■■ the first glance; and ■■■ should know them to be Masters of Arts without the aid of the background. The scene in Emanuel College Garden, Cambridge, exhibits the learned in a state of relaxation; several handsome lasses remove apples from a tree, and the indolent curiosity with which they are viewed by these sons of ease is very characteristic.'

While considering Rowlandson in relation to his contemporaries, ■■■ have chiefly to deal with those gifted gentlemen who were, like himself, generally spoken of in their generation as caricaturists, and to whose works ■■■ artist was able, from his ■■■■ considerable acquirements, to give ■ presentable form, and put into circulation through the medium of his proficiency with the etching-needle.

Foremost among these ■■■ must speak of Henry Bunbury, so many of whose felicitous conceptions have derived additional force and popularity alike through the agency of ■■■ artist.

In speaking of the caricaturist's treatment of these amateur works, we are glad ■■■ be able ■■■ offer our readers the respectable testimony of Thomas Wright in support of our own modest opinion, with which intention ■■■ quote a few paragraphs from ■■■ late friend's History of Caricature and Grotesque in Literature and Art.

'At various periods certain of Bunbury's designs ■■■■ engraved by Rowlandson, who always transferred his own style ■■■ the drawings he copied. A remarkable instance of this is furnished by a print of a party of anglers of both sexes in a punt, entitled Anglers of 1811 (the year of Bunbury's death). But for the name, "H. Bunbury, del.," very distinctly inscribed upon it, ■■■ should take this ■ be a genuine design by Rowlandson; and in 1803 Rowlandson engraved some copies of Bunbury's prints on horsemanship for Ackermann, of the Strand, in which all traces of Bunbury's style ■ lost.

'There ■ much of Bunbury's style in that of Woodward, who had a ■ for the same broad caricatures ■ society, which he executed in a similar spirit. Some of the suites of subjects of this description that he published, such as the series of the Symptoms of the Shop, those of Everybody out of Town, and Everybody in Town, and the specimens of Domestic Phrensy, ■ extremely clever and amusing. Woodward's designs ■ also not unfrequently engraved by Rowlandson, who, ■ usual, imprinted his own style upon them. A very good example of this practice is seen in the print entitled Desire, in which the passion is exemplified in the ■ of a hungry school-boy, watching through a window ■ jolly cook carrying by ■ tempting plum pudding. We ■ told in ■ inscription underneath: "Various are the ways this passion might be depicted; in this delineation the subjects chosen are simple—a hungry boy and a plum pudding." The design of this print is stated to be Woodward's; but the style is altogether that of Rowlandson, whose name appears on it as the etcher. It was published by R. Ackermann on January 20, 1800.'

In transferring the works of other caricaturists to the copper, Rowland- ■ was in the habit of giving his own style to them in such a degree that nobody would suspect they ■ not his own if the name of the designer were not attached to them.

We cannot take leave of the Caricaturists without offering ■ few slight particulars concerning the respective careers of the most eminent and appreciated practitioners of the graphic art in its grotesque bearings.

The fecundity of invention displayed in the works of Henry Bunbury entitles him ■ rank among the first in this class of designers. The happy faculty which he possessed of 'reading character at sight,' and the ■ felicity with which he could embody whatever his observation ■ fancy suggested, with that scrambling style which was entirely his own, evince that he ■ born with a genius ■ make ■ figure in this pursuit. This gentleman may be instanced as a proof, too, that where there is an original faculty for any peculiar art, it will develop itself, though the possessor may be entirely unacquainted with the scientific principles of art. Nothing could be farther removed from legitimate than the style exhibited in the drawings of Bunbury; yet no one has hit off the peculiarities of character, or expressed with less exaggeration those traits which constitute the burlesque. Bunbury, indeed, may be said to have steered his humorous between sterling character and caricature. When he appears to outrage nature by representing distortion of figure or form, the fault is not intentional. Those who have not properly studied the drawing of the human figure, must occasionally, in spite of themselves, render their objects preternatural.

It should be added, in honour to the memory of this gentleman, that he never used his pencil at the expense of personal feeling. His satire upon the French people was not individual, but national; and the characters which he introduced in his humorous designs at home, were characteristic of a class, but not the individuals of a species.

Henry William Bunbury, the caricaturist, was born in 1750. He was educated at Westminster, whence he removed to St. Catherine's Hall, Cambridge. On leaving the university he devoted himself, with some enthusiasm, to the fine arts. He was passionately fond of out-door sports, and, in the instance of Leech in our own days, the saddle held attractions superior even to the pleasure of exercising his fancy. His contemporaries much given to deplore that he preferred the excitement of risking his neck in the hunting field to the cultivation of the profession his skill should have adorned. His and invention were admired not only by the gifted and elevated persons of his time, but artists and critics alike lavished their encomiums on the favoured designer. Horace Walpole coveted the sketches which Bunbury exhibited on the walls of the Academy, while Sir Joshua Reynolds and Sir Benjamin West combined to pay their finest compliments to the artist, and to publish abroad their flattering sense of his merits. Bunbury appears to have spent the greater part of his time on the estates belonging to his family, varied by trips to the Continent and visits to his patrons the Duke and Duchess of York, at Richmond and other residences, with occasional sojourns in Wales, the scenery of which had considerable attractions for his sense of the picturesque. He was a frequent guest of Sir W. W. Wynne, and his pencil has celebrated the theatrical gatherings at Wynnstay. We also meet him in town, surrounded by illustrious friends, and we find Goldsmith, Garrick, and other notabilities corresponding with the kindly and generous caricaturist during his sojourns at his country seat.

Henry Bunbury married, August 26, 1771, to Catherine, daughter of Kane William Horneck, Esq., lieutenant-colonel of the army of Sicily. This lady bore him ■ sons, and ■ of them, Sir Henry Bunbury, ■ believe, represented the county of Suffolk in Parliament, after the decease of his uncle Sir Thomas Charles Bunbury, who had previously enjoyed the distinction. Bunbury, the artist, ■ elected lieutenant-colonel of the West Suffolk regiment of militia. His manners ■ most popular, and it ■ remarked that he carried his cheerful and vivacious spirit into every society he frequented. He died ■ Keswick, in Cumberland, where he had settled towards the close of his life, and his sketches of the mountain scenery in his vicinity are said to have displayed the hand of ■ master, and to have gained universal appreciation for their effect and truthfulness.

As ■ delineator of character, it is stated 'that his sketches approached nearest to Hogarth of any painter of his period, in the representation of life and manners; his pencil never transgresses the limits of good taste and delicacy, and had he been under the necessity of pursuing art for profit, instead of amusement and pleasure only, he would probably have made a great fortune by the produce of his genius, which the print-sellers have found a lucrative ■ of gain, engravings and etchings after his works having always been eagerly demanded.'

The high estimation in which the caricaturist ■ personally held is confirmed by the obituary notice which appeared on his decease in the Gentleman's Magazine; the praise ■ to be spontaneous, and its object, from all we ■ gather, richly merited the friendly testimony.

'May 7, 1811.—At Keswick, Henry William Bunbury, Esq., second ■ of the Rev. Sir William Bunbury, Bart., of Mildenhall, and of Great Barton, in the county of Suffolk, and brother to the present Sir Thomas Bunbury, Bart. He ■ distinguished ■ very early age by ■ most extraordinary degree of taste and knowledge in the fine arts. The productions of his ■ pencil have, from his childhood, been the admiration and delight of the public. The exquisite humour of ■ of his drawings, and the grace and elegance of the rest, ■ unrivalled; and he is, perhaps, the only instance in which excellences of such various and almost opposite character have been united in the same subject in an equal degree. But though he possessed in this respect ■ peculiar genius, he neglected no branch of polite literature. He was ■ good classical scholar, and "endowed with the love of sacred song." The Muses were to him dulces ante omnia. He ■ an excellent judge of poetry; and the specimens remaining of his own composition put it beyond ■ doubt that he would have been ■ eminent with his pen ■ with his pencil, if his natural modesty, underrating his ■ powers, had not prevented him from pursuing it with ■ application. These accomplishments were conspicuous, and obtained for him universal esteem. His social and moral qualities, while any of those remain who shared his friendship, will continue the objects of fond admiration and regret. No ribaldry, ■ profaneness, no ill-natured censure, ever flowed from his lips, but his conversation abounded in humour and pleasantry; it was charming to persons of all descriptions. No one ever in his company without being pleased with him; none knew him without loving him. His feelings were the most benevolent, his affections the most delicate, his heart the most sincere. He was void of all affectation, alive to praise, but not obtrusively courting it. Conscious, but not ostentatious of merit; of unblemished honour; full of that piety and liberal-handed charity which influences the heart, and seeks the witness, not of the world, but of his Maker.'

The writer of the obituary notice expressed a conviction, confirmed, as he stated, by the intimacy of fifty years' standing:—

'All who had,' concludes the memorial, 'the slightest acquaintance with him, will bear witness to the extraordinary tenderness of his disposition, to his kind and active friendship, to his universal benevolence, practically displayed through his entire career.'

The name of Woodward is so frequently in caricatures to which Rowlandson sculptit is added, that our readers will probably not consider the following sketch of this eccentric gifted celebrity either out of place, or entirely superfluous.

Recapitulating his recollections of humorous artists, Angelo informs us that—'The inventive genius of one burlesque designer is exhaustless—George Moutard Woodward, commonly designated by his merry associates, Mustard George. This original genius was the son of the steward of a certain wealthy landholder, and resided with his father in a provincial town, where nothing was less known than everything pertaining to the arts. He was, as his neighbours said, a "natural geni"; for he drew all the comical gaffers and gammers of the country round; and having, to use his own words, "taken off the bench of justices, wigs and all, shown up the mayor and corporation, dumb-founded the parson of the parish, silenced the clerk, and made the sexton laugh at his grave occupation," he thought it expedient to beat up for new game in the metropolitan city.

"A caricaturist in a country town," said George, "like a mad bull in a china-shop, cannot step without noise; so, having made a little noise in my native place, I persuaded my father to let me seek my fortune in town."

'It appears that the caricaturist came ■■■ to London, like many another wit, penniless | his father allowed him an annuity of first fifty, and augmented the sum to a hundred pounds. With this income, and what he obtained by working for the publishers, he was enabled to enjoy life in his ■■■ way; and might be met, with ■ tankard of Burton ale before him, seated behind his pipe, nightly ■ Offley's; or, if not there, smoking the fragrant weed, at the Cider Cellar, the Blue Posts, or The Hole in the Wall. Latterly, his rendezvous ■■■ transferred ■ The Brown Bear ■ Bow Street, where he studied those peculiar species of low characters, the inhabitants of the round-house, and the myrmidons of the police. Enamoured with the society of these able physiognomists, he ultimately took up his quarters at the Brown Bear, and there, to the lively grief of these tender-hearted associates, ■■■ night died in character, suddenly, with ■ glass of brandy in his hand.

'The wit and invention of this artist places him above all others in the personification of low ■■■ of humour. Among his earliest productions were those series of groups entitled Effects of Flattery, Effects of Hope, &c., which were illustrated by scenes of truly dramatic excellence, and upon which might well be built farces for the stage which could not fail ■ delight the town. His Babes in the Wood, Raffling for ■ Coffin, The Club of Quidnuncs, as pieces of original humour, have never, perhaps, been equalled. Had this low humourist studied drawing and been temperate in his habits, such ■■■ the fecundity of his imagination and perception of character, that he might have rivalled even Hogarth. His style, always sufficiently careless, latterly even outraged the outré. Yet there were those, and ■■■ of ■■■ too, who insisted that the humour of his pieces was augmented by the extravagance of this defect.'

The name of Henry Wigstead will be met with pretty constantly in the ■■■ of this volume; his designs approach the nearest to those of Rowlandson as far as regards humorous qualities, ■ cultivated ■■■ of beauty and grace, and a decided grasp of character, without that violent divergence from the semblance of humanity as ordinarily recognised, to which failing the old-fashioned caricaturists ■■■ somewhat over-addicted, as ■■■ inclined ■ suspect; but, like many worthy amateurs of his period, his ■■■ hand lacked the skill to express all that his eye saw and his ■■■ appreciated. In the guise of a skilled translator of crude ideas, ■■■ Caricaturist, with ready ease, and that dexterity which was peculiarly his own, came ■ the ■■■ most efficiently, and his etchings and scrapings have preserved many a capital design, due ■ the esteemed Wigstead, which otherwise would have been lost; the sterling excellence ■ be detected in many of these pictorial scenes and satires, renders the action meritorious, which has enabled posterity to judge how far those praises which partial contemporaries lavished upon all these non-professional humourists, were justified by the actual merits of their subjects. We have already recounted certain jocose and whimsical traits in the disposition and character of this genial son of merriment; we have nothing to add but the brief notice from the obituary of The Gentleman's Magazine for October 1800, which informed many a congenial friend of the loss society had sustained, and made many a heart feel saddened by the stroke which had fallen on the kindest and best of comrades.

'At Margate, where he went for the benefit of his health, Henry Wigstead, Esq., of Kensington, an active magistrate for the county of Middlesex.¹ He was a man of considerable talent, and contributed to the celebrity of the Brandenburgh theatre, both by his pen and his pencil. He was a good caricaturist, which naturally made him more enemies than friends. He was hospitable and generous to a degree of extravagance. He married the daughter of Mr. Bagnal, of Gerard Street, with whom he had a good fortune, and by whom he leaves two children, a son and a daughter.'

Another eminent humourist, in whose praise contemporaries were enthusiastic, but whose biography no one has taken the pains to collect, was John Nixon, the facetious Nixon, as he is generally entitled in the memoirs and scribblings of the period; beyond the kindly appreciative anecdotes of this worthy, handed down by Angelo, barely any record exists. Pleasant John Nixon was an Irish factor, and resided for many years in Basinghall Street, where, over his dark warehouses, he and his brother Richard kept 'bachelors' court.' The elder brother, John, however, was the principal mover in all the convivialities and Bacchanalian revels celebrated in this old-fashioned dwelling; 'which was not too large for comfort, and yet sufficiently spacious in the first floor, at least, to spread a table for twelve. Who that were witty, or highly talented of the days that are gone, who, loving a social gossip, over a magnum bonum of capital wine, had not been invited to his hospitable board?' The Nixons were wealthy, and had the felicity to be well enabled to enjoy life according to their own liking.

John Nixon, besides possessing a well-deserved reputation for social qualifications of an ordinary calibre, was a man of taste and talent, and an amateur performer in various arts, his accomplishments being multifarious.

As a man of business he was highly respected, as a man of pleasure universally sought, and as generally esteemed. Sedulous in his commercial pursuits, in the counting-house his maxim was that there is time for all things, and he found leisure daily, when the ledger was closed, to open his heart to the enjoyment of friendly intercourse. 'I have no objection to placing my knees under another man's table,' the social convive would say, 'but I had rather ■■■ him ■ my own.'

¹ Sitting magistrate at Bow Street.

Nixon was ■ home ■ the Beef-steak Club, where he ■■ made honorary secretary and providore, ■ well-bestowed distinction, since he was a first-rate connoisseur of wines, and ■ capital judge of ■ rump of beef. 'My lord duke,' he would say to the noble president, 'he who would invite Jupiter to ■ feast on ■ steak, should select ■ prime cut of little more than half-an-inch thick, from ■ Norfolk-fed Scot,' and this, says Angelo, became ■■■ law in that glorious club.

Among other pursuits for which Nixon obtained notoriety among the haut ton, he ■■ known for his fondness for the stage. An excellent amateur performer, he shone as ■■ of the stars of the celebrated private theatricals held ■■ Brandenburgh House, when in the possession of the Margrave and Margravine of Anspach. It ■■ under the splendid roof of these entertainers, ■ an occasion when all the amateurs ■■ celebrating their host's anniversary, that Nixon ■■ honoured with his cognomen of 'the well-bred man.' On his late arrival in ■ piebald uniform, his blue dress-coat, with the gold buttons of the Beef-steak Club, being considerably powdered, the wearer, who was not in the least disconcerted or embarrassed, related, ■ taking his seat at the table, ■ droll tale of adventures ■ the road, to the hearty amusement of the company, while the servants were in convulsions of laughter, ■ Nixon described how the post-horses ■■ knocked up, and he ■■ obliged to complete his journey and his engagement in the cart of ■ baker, where he got completely dusted with flour; whence the Margravine facetiously dubbed him the 'well-bread man.'

John Nixon's original talent for the humorous department of the graphic art ■■ well known; ■ an honorary exhibitor at the Royal Academy for many years, his grotesque scenes such as Bartholomew Fair, and village fêtes, abounding with character, diverted the public. Angelo, in recording the comical celebrity of his friend, mentions, 'Nixon had the reputation of introducing, through his inventive faculty, that most amusing species of caricature, the converting spades, hearts, clubs, and diamonds into grotesque figures and groups, which he designed with a whimsicality of appropriateness, that Gillray, ■ even George Cruikshank himself, might have envied.'

The list of amateur artists, who enjoyed Rowlandson's friendship, and whose designs received the advantages which his assistance ■■ able to lend them, will not be complete without the name of Collings, well known in the regions of

Covent Garden, and some time editor of the Public Ledger, who was a lively satirist, both with his pencil and his pen. 'When Boswell's Tour to the Hebrides was ushered forth, it was celebrated by as many crackers and squibs as the Burning of the Boot (Lord Bute). Among other assailants, the impenetrable Bozzy had not exposed his front to this lampooner's shafts. A whole series of designs published by this witty wag, the heroes of which, or rather the knight and the esquire of his drama, were Johnson and Boswell. The knight, it is likely, saw them; and, for the squire, his love of notoriety rendered him, if not vain of, at least not vulnerable to, these successive attacks.¹

'The Laird of Auchinlek, indeed, had a large collection of these satires upon "self and company," but he used facetiously to inscribe them, and boasted at the judge's table that his History would be more copiously illustrated than was the Lord High Chancellor, Clarendon's.'

Caleb Whiteford, another crony of the caricaturist, was an excellent judge of paintings (especially works by the old masters) and was generally known as a fervent admirer of George Moreland's pictures; he was the reputed discoverer of 'cross readings,'² and a dabbler in verse. It was he who, everyone will remember, received such complimentary notice in the postscript to the mock epitaphs known as Goldsmith's Retaliation, that there were not wanting those who contributed to the flattery by suspecting that the additional epitaph was due to Caleb's own pen.

Old Caleb Whiteford, the witty wine-merchant and 'connoisseur in old masters,' knew everyone of any reputation, and was well-received at the various hospitable boards to which allusions have been made in the course of these discursive notes; he was a welcome guest at the convivial gatherings of the artistic and literary coteries of the period, whose jovial meetings and good cheer have been suffered to pass into oblivion, unrecorded by the scribes who shared 'the cakes and ale,' in the palmy days of sociable festivities and kindly familiar intercourse.

'Mr. Ephraim Hardcastle, citizen and dry-salter,' as he whimsically elected to style himself—in sober fact, W. H. Pyne, the artist to whose literary ventures we have already referred—has on occasions been in the wine and

¹ See Boswell (the Elder). Twenty Caricatures by Collings and Rowlandson in Illustration of Deane's 'Journal of a Tour in the Hebrides,' 1786.

² These cross-readings obtained such celebrity that the inventor was tempted to distribute amongst his friends specimens, which 'he had been at the expense of printing upon small single sheets.' We quote a couple of examples from a slip, which was in the possession of J. T. (Antiquity) Smith's family, and, being considered something of a curiosity, is given in the Notes of Nollekens and his Times.

Sunday night many noble persons were alarmed—

By the constable of the watch, who apprehended them all cards.

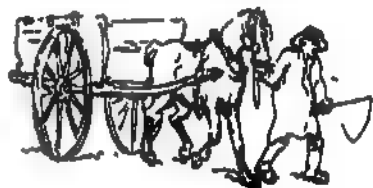

Wanted, a take care of an elderly gentlewoman—

An active young man just come from the country.

Walnuts, after-dinner Chit-Chat. Here is the report of a conversation concerning Rowlandson, which is supposed have taken place between Whiteford and the caricaturist's jolly friend Mitchell, culled from the Chit-Chat in question, which was published in 1823.

'Well, Master Caleb Whiteford¹ was on his way up the hill in the Adelphi his post the Society of Arts, and who should he stumble upon the of James Street, just turning round from Rowlandson's, but Master Mitchell, the quondam banker of old Hodsoll's house. He had, usual, been foraging among the multitudinous sketches of that original artist, and held a portfolio under his arm, and he preparing to step into his chariot, Caleb accosted him: "Well, worthy sir; what! more choice bits—more graphic whimsies to add to the collection Enfield, eh? Well, how fares it with friend Roly?" (a familiar term by which the artist known to his ancient cronies).

"Why, yes, Master Caleb Whiteford, I go collecting on, though I begin think I have enough already, for I have hundreds of his spirited works; but somehow there is a sort of fascination in these matters, and—heigh—ha—ho—hoo!" (gaping) "I never go up—up—bless the man, why will he live so high? It kills me to climb his stairs"—holding his ponderous sides—"I never go up, Mister Caleb, but I find something new, and am tempted to pull my purse-strings. His invention, his humour, his—his oddity is exhaustless." "Yes," said Whiteford, "Master Roly is never at a loss for a subject, and I should not be surprised if he is taking a bird's-eye view of you and me at this moment, and marking us down for game. But it is not his drawings alone; why, he says he has etched as much copper would sheathe a first-rate man-of-war; and I should think he is not far from the mark in his assertion.'

"Yes," replied the banker, "he ought to be rich, for his genius is certainly the most exhaustless, the most—the most—no, Mister Caleb, there is end him; he manufactures his humorous ware with such increasing vigour, that I know not what to compare his prolific fancy to, unless it be to the increasing population. . . .

"Roly has promised down. I would have taken the rogue with me, only that he is about some new scheme for his old friend Ackermann, there, and he says he must complete it within an hour. You know Roly's expedition."

James Heath, also a caricaturist, and a delineator of sporting sketches, another of Rowlandson's intimates; a Good-Friday jaunt, an Easter excursion, ¹ Caleb Whiteford Vice-President of Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce.

■ for many years indulged by these worthies, who with genial Bannister, the comedian, and their faithful chronicler, Henry Angelo, the fencing-master, annually kept up the practice of proceeding on a jovial expedition ■ this season, some distance from town, Staines, Windsor, ■ ■ ■ similar starting-point, being the rendezvous selected by these congenial spirits.

The list of Rowlandson's friends would be incomplete without the ■ of George Moreland, who, with all his eccentricities and shortcomings, ■ another favoured child of fortune, whose inheritance was natural genius; and though the fairy gift ■ turned ■ the very worst account, dragged through the mire of dissipation, and sordidly made to supply the ■ of that social degradation, which lowered the possessor beneath his worst associates, the power remained in the poor shattered wreck, and did not forsake him until, in ■ of premature decay, he perished miserably before his easel.

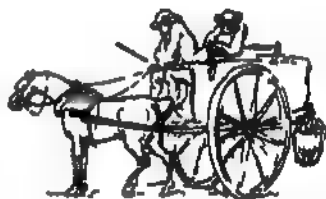

A sketch of Moreland's career is by no ■ called for in this place. His erratic disposition ■ not without its whimsical traits; sufficient anecdotes exist of the wayward painter to prove that, beyond his happy qualifications for his art, there ■ found in his composition ■ spice of pleasantry that did not always degenerate into buffoonery or horse-play, with occasional flashes of wit and sprightly allusions which, to say the least of them, were remarkably apposite. Perhaps too much ■ has been laid upon Moreland's deficiencies, while ■ more agreeable traits have been somewhat slighted. Putting aside the ■ ■ ■ anecdotal sketches of the painter, we have only to record, in this place ■ least, that a friendship existed between the subject of this volume and the ■ to whose sketches those of our caricaturist frequently offer ■ suggestive resemblance, it being actually difficult to distinguish between the unsigned etchings and drawings of the two artists, in the walk practised by Moreland. The similarity of their talent is ■ evident perhaps in the larger hunting scenes, and the studies of female heads, tinted in colours, than in any other direction; although, with the pencil or the chalk, their rustic landscapes, from the freedom of their respective handlings, ■ remarkably alike, both in the choice of subjects and the spirit of the execution.

As ■ have already noticed, the most characteristic portrait of Moreland, and the one which appears ■ offer ■ the ■ life-like representation of the capricious painter, is due to the skill of Rowlandson. We ■ informed, in a note which ■ gather from Angelo, that Moreland, in his various flittings round the metropolis in dread of creditors, when he took sanctuary with any intimate whose residence he happened to remember, gave his colleague the caricaturist the opportunity of exhibiting his friendship by harbouring him in his lodgings under ■ of these emergencies, which were of tolerably frequent occurrence. 'Rowlandson, the artist, lodged ■ Mrs. Lay's printshop, ■ few doors from

Carlton House, Pall Mall. One morning when I called upon him, ■ heard ■ loud knock ■ the ■ door, and looking ■ of the window, he said, "There's Colonel Thornton—knock again! He may be ■ this fun three months longer; he is come for his picture, but Moreland, having touched fifty pounds in advance, is ■ home to him ■ He's in the ■ room, which he has for painting. You had better go and do the ■ with him, and drink gin and water; he'll like your company, and make you ■ drawing for nothing." This ■ in the middle of the day.'

We ■ inclined ■ think that the most memorable of the caricaturist's associates ■ James Gillray, whose age ■ within ■ year of that of Rowlandson; it is ■ coincidence that two unrivalled geniuses, and in such eccentric walks, should have been both contemporaries, and steady-going friends, ■ clashing in the ■ of their respective ■ In this work various allusions will be noticed to the intimacy which subsisted between these remarkably gifted men, each perfectly original in his fashion, and both possessing singular points of resemblance in their characters.

We content ourselves with mentioning that they occasionally entered into friendly alliances, but that, when pitted against each other, they had more regard for friendship than for party warfare, which they utterly despised, except as an opening for the exercise of their skill.

Gillray and Rowlandson were, perhaps, never properly appreciated in their generation, the higher capacities which distinguished both these spoiled pets and wilful sons of Momus, ■ comparatively slighted, if not completely ignored; all that ■ vulgar, wayward, and wild in their dispositions was fostered and enlarged upon; their errors, and their occasional lapses into downright coarseness, were, according ■ the lights of the day, flattered and encouraged as flights of the raciest humour; the crude, careless, and commonplace, received too frequently ■ hearty and undeserved recognition, which their ambitious efforts failed ■ inspire; the very productions they scorned ■ exalted, while, when they felt the magic fire warming their imaginations, the results were misunderstood too commonly.

Their keen intellects, and their satiric ■ of the almost constant unfitness of things as they found them, the gnawing of the vanity of vanities, ■ present, ■ have made their temperaments peculiarly sensitive to such slights ■ the ■ of discrimination in their admirers which occasionally shocked and ■ continually disheartened them—evils which the want of culture, ■ consideration ■ the part of their audience, continually brought in their train.

It ■ no matter of surprise that the enchantments which they saw before them at the opening of their careers, vanished ■ too soon, and left them chilled, and inclined to become misanthropes ; the very genius, which promised ■ be ■ delight ■ themselves and ■ mankind, proving a bitter ■■■■

When the satirists, who felt alike and ■■■■ sympathetic on ■■■■ points, met, it seems their intercourse ■■■■ the reverse of boisterous—in fact, they ■■■■ rather inclined to be depressed, or, ■ least, they shrunk within themselves with a ■■■■ marked contrast to the conduct which should, it was supposed, distinguish notorious pictorial humourists, and became, perhaps, a trifle ■■■■ retired and undemonstrative than ordinary—possibly to the disappointment of the less-informed habitués, who evidently thought they were defrauded of ■ diversion, and had a right to anticipate, these gentlemen being in ■ sort graphic jesters by profession, that in private life they would feel themselves impelled to play off a little whimsical jugglery for the entertainment of the company. These professional tricks belonged to the lesser lights, and we warrant that Woodward, Collings, Newton, and the smaller following of the eccentric art, were infinitely ■■■■ amusing to the taste of their auditors.

It is certain Gillray ■■■■ grave and self-contained, and Rowlandson, in his degree, participated in his friend's humour, slightly ■ first, perhaps, ■ a passing depression, and, later in life, with an intensified and growing grimness, and ■ gathering gloom, as friends dropped off, and age crept on, and the caricaturist's world ■■■■ materially altered for him, as his work seemed ■■■■

' For years Gillray occasionally smoked his pipe at The Bell, The Coal-Hole, or The Coach and Horses ; and, although the convives, whom he met ■ such dingy rendezvous, knew that he was that Gillray who fabricated those comical cuts, the very moral of Farmer George and Boneyparty, of Billy Pitt and Black Charley, he never sought, like that low coxcomb Moreland, ■ become king of the company. He neither exacted, nor were they inclined to pay him, any particular homage. In truth, with his associates, neighbouring shopkeepers and master manufacturers, he passed for no greater wit than his neighbours. Rowlandson, his ingenious compeer, and he, sometimes met. They would, perhaps, exchange half-a-dozen questions and answers upon the affairs of copper and aquafortis ; swear all the world ■■■■ one vast masquerade, and then enter into the ■■■■ chat of the room, smoke their cigars, drink their punch, and sometimes early, sometimes late, shake hands ■ the door, look up at the stars, say " It is a frosty night," and depart, ■■■■ for the Adelphi, the other to St. James's Street, each to his bachelor's bed.'¹

Our friend Angelo, a bright chirpy spirit, who retained his liveliness unimpaired, let us hope, ■ the last of his long days, not having any pretensions to be ■ genius, ■■■■ exempt from the sinister tendencies which too frequently attend its possession. Although, as he confesses in his Memoirs, not precisely the 'rose' himself, he had lived ■■■ it, and his association with ■■■ of an admittedly high type, ■■■ far ■■■ gifts of fancy and versatile talents ■■■ concerned, had taught him to observe the drawbacks not unusually allied to distinguishing attainments; and he records ■■■ few sober axioms for the enlightenment of those who have been excluded from his privileges.

¹ Somerset House Gazette and Literary Museum, No. 26. By Ephraim Hardcastle (W. H. Pyne). 1824.

'Those who ■■■ distance contemplate characters like these, ■■■ professedly eminent for invention, wit, and satirical humour, naturally suppose their society must be universally sought; and that such must, of necessity, be the life and soul of the convivial board. Men, however, who see much and speculate but little, know better. Among the dullest in company could be pointed out those who are "wondrous witty" by themselves; and this not from pride of their superior faculty to please, but from ■■■ constitutional shyness or modest desire to avoid notice ■■■ applause—or from indolence, or actually from conscious dulness when absent from the study and the desk, when without the pencil and the pen.

'Peter Pindar was witless, even over his bottle, with his most intimate cronies. Anthony Pasquin ■■■ sour, and not prone to converse. Churchill was a sulky sot. Butler was lively neither drunk nor sober—a choice companion only when "half gone;" hence, as the witty Duke of Buckingham observed, "he was to be compared to a skittle, little at both ends, but great in the middle!" Burton, who had no less humour than Cervantes, and the learning of a whole university to boot, was neither ■■■ cheerful companion, nor endurable to himself. A hundred more could be named, whose aptitude and promptness to discover the ridiculous side of human action, has astonished the grave; and yet, these ■■■ who have thus exposed folly to the laughter of mankind, have been themselves the dullest dogs alive. Gillray ■■■ always "hipped," and at last sunk into that deplorable state of mental aberration which verifies the couplet, ■■■ often quoted, wherein the consanguinity of wit to madness is so eminently proved, ■■■ the comfort of those who thank God for their own stupidity.'

Perhaps the most constant friend, and certainly the best adviser, our caricaturist retained to the grave ■■■ his principal publisher, Mr. Rudolph Ackermann. We have mentioned this gentleman last among the personal associates of Rowlandson, as his untiring services only ended with the life of the artist.

The ■■■ of Rudolph Ackermann, who died March 30, 1834, is worthy of ■■■ than ■■■ passing mention; he has been cited ■■■ one of the first natives of Germany who, by far-sighted and active occupation, accompanied by philanthropic exertions for the benefit of his fellow-creatures, raised the character of his nationality ■■■ high point of esteem in other countries. An account of his energetic and charitable ■■■ appeared in the Didaskalia, Frankfurt-am-Main, No. 103,

April 13, 1864, and was adopted by the writer (W. P.) of an excellent notice upon the well-known publisher, in the pages of Notes and Queries, (4th S. iv., August 7 and 14, 1869). The father of a coach-builder, Rudolph Ackermann was born April 20, 1764, at Stolberg, in the Saxon Hartz. We are told 'his sympathies with the misfortunes of others were so warmly excited by the misery around him in the famine of 1772-73, that he frequently in later years excused the zeal which he showed on other occasions, by pictures of the distress that he experienced when he, at the age of eight years, was employed for hours daily in distributing food and money.' In 1775 his father removed to Schneeberg. Rudolph received his education in the local school till he was fifteen years old, and showed a decided predilection for literary pursuits; but his father's pecuniary position precluding the choice of a profession to him rather than of his sons, he entered the paternal factory. An elder brother, Frederick, instructed Rudolph in the use of the drawing instruments, and he busied himself more willingly in the offices than in the workshops, gaining an acquaintance with details, which proved subsequently so important to his advancement as were his visits to Dresden, the capital of the Rhine, and Hueningen near Basle. He afterwards came to reside in Paris, where he became the friend of Carrossi, the most esteemed designer of equipages of his time, and Rudolph, who proved his best pupil, acquired sufficient knowledge as a practical draughtsman to push his way in the world. From Paris he proceeded to London in pursuit of fortune, and there turn his talents to account: he was delighted to find that, in the metropolis, carriage-building was one of the most successful occupations, and that the exercise of his acquirements would be handsomely rewarded; so for several years, until 1795, he was employed in furnishing the principal coachmakers with designs and models for new and improved carriages. The models of the state coach, built at the cost of nearly 7,000*l.*, for the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in 1790,¹ and that for the Lord Mayor of Dublin in 1791, exhibited his taste and skill. In 1805, the preparation of the car that served as a hearse at the funeral of Lord Nelson was entrusted to him; and during the years 1818-20 the patent for a moveable axle for carriages engaged much of his attention.

It is not, however, in this connection that we have to consider Ackermann, but rather in his relation to the arts as a print-seller and publisher. On his marriage with an English lady, with commendable prudence, he became desirous of establishing a business which would, in the event of his own premature decease, prove a suitable provision for his family. He commenced the print trade in 96 Strand, and ■■■ after he secured a large apartment, 65 feet long, 30 feet wide, and 24 feet high, ■ 101 Strand (erected upon the courtyard of Beaufort House), which had been the drawing academy of William Shipley; it had then passed to Henry Pars, and later passed into the hands of the Radicals, and became notorious as the British Forum, when it ■■■ used by John Thelwall for his oratorical lectures. These meetings exceeding the bounds of reasonable political discussion, the Government instituted prosecutions, and the Forum ceased to exist. On the ministerial interference, October 1794, Mr. Ackermann ■■■ enabled to ■■■ the lease of the premises, and the room was again used as ■ school for drawing. In 1796 the entire business ■■■ removed ■ 101 Strand. The drawing academy ■■■ to have flourished; and in 1806 there were three masters engaged for figures, landscape, and architecture, and some eighty pupils ■■■ resorting to the school, when the requirements of the founder's business, ■ ■ publisher, print-seller, and dealer in fancy articles, papers, medallions, and artist's materials, had ■ increased, that the convenience of this room as a warehouse became of more consideration than the continuance of the school.

¹ The reader may observe a similar chariot in the Museum at South Kensington; it might readily be mistaken for the one referred to above, and is of the same elaborate character. It is described as 'built for the Lord Chancellor of Ireland (1780), the panels painted by W. Hamilton, R.A.'

During the revolutionary era, and when French emigrants were numerous in this country, Mr. Ackermann was one of the first to find a liberal employment for the refugees; it is said that he had seldom less than fifty nobles, priests, and ladies engaged upon screens, card-racks, flower-stands, and other ornamental work.

His inventive faculties and his disposition to take up with new ideas were marked by many improvements he introduced. At the beginning of the century he ■■■ one of the first who arrived at a method of waterproofing paper, leather, woollen stuffs, and felted fabrics, in which he obtained for ■■■ time considerable traffic; this branch was conducted in a factory he established at Chelsea for the purpose.

He further contrived an apparatus which was at least ingenious, both in theory and intention. To counteract Napoleon's endeavours, by bridling the newspapers, to keep the French nation in complete ignorance, as ■■■ actually the case, of events that ■■■ disastrous to him, Mr. Ackermann bethought himself of reviving, for the annoyance of the enemy, the ■■■ made by the French in 1794-96 of aërostation in L'Entrepreneur and the Télémaque; and he contrived ■ simple mechanism which would, every minute, detach thirty printed placards from ■ packet of three thousand. Three such parcels ■■■ attached to balloons thirty-six inches in diameter, made of gold-beater's skin, and committed to the air in the ■■■ of 1807. The success of the experiment ■■■ proved ■ Woolwich in the presence of a Government commission. With a southerly wind the balloons passed over Salisbury and Exeter, and several of the placards, as ■ proof of the practical working of the machinery, ■■■■ returned to London from various parts of the country.

Mr. Ackermann was one of the first inhabitants of London who adopted the ■■■■ of gas as ■■■■ of artificial light ■■■■ his premises.

The establishment of lithography in England ■■■■ another example of his patient and persevering expenditure of money and time in the introduction and improvement of ■■■■ novelty. 'He was not content with translating Alois Senefelder's treatise in 1819, but made ■■■■ journey to the residence of that inventor, in order to exchange the results of their theory and practice before producing in 1822 ■■■■ Complete Course. The business relations between leading artists and Mr. Ackermann enabled him ■■■■ induce them to touch the lithographic chalk; ■■■■ in 1817, through Prout and others, the process became ■■■■ acceptable, ■■■■ rather ■■■■ fashionable mode of multiplying drawings; lithography, for want of such advantages, when introduced into this country by Mr. Andrée, of Offenbach, in its original and rude state, had failed to make its way, and all its subsequent success may be attributed to Mr. Ackermann's personal emulation of the advancement it made in Munich.'

In 1813, upon receiving an authentic account from Count Schönfeld of the misery produced in Germany by Napoleon's wars, particularly in Saxony, culminating in engagements at Leipzig (during the 'five days' October 15-19, 1813), 'Mr. Ackermann temporarily abandoned the oversight of his own multifarious occupations, in order to exert all his strength in procuring aid for the sufferers. With the help of the Duke of Sussex, he formed ■■■■ committee in Westminster and in the City; the first obtained ■■■■ Parliamentary grant of 100,000*l.*, and the second furnished ■■■■ larger ■■■■ in private contributions. This was the occasion on which the use of Whitehall Chapel ■■■■ granted for a musical performance in aid of the subscription. For two years, Mr. Ackermann undertook the task of corresponding with the German committees for distributing these sums, examining into the urgency of the appeals for help, and apportioning the fund. The members of "The Westminster Association for the further relief of the sufferers by the war in Germany," ■■■■ anxious to commemorate their ■■■■ of the pains, prudence, and probity Mr. Ackermann had displayed, by presenting him with ■■■■ testimonial in silver; this costly acknowledgment, together with ■■■■ vote of thanks proposed to be inscribed ■■■■ parchment in gold, he had the modesty to decline, begging that all thanks for his services might be comprised in ■■■■ few autograph lines from the Archbishop of Canterbury.'

In his business relations we are told, 'the discretion which he exercised in choosing his subordinates, and the liberal manner in which he repaid their services, enabled him to produce several books which deserve the notice of all those who know how to appreciate the merit of these illustrated works in colour, relatively ■ others of similar pretension, both of that time and of the present day.

'A long list might be formed by enumerating the literary, musical, and scientific men of ■ or less eminence, who appeared ■ his coadjutors, and who enjoyed his intimacy. Several of them owed to him ■ helping hand, either in their first efforts or in their declining fortunes. To the end of his days he retained a strongly-marked German pronunciation of the English language, which gave additional flavour to the banters and jests uttered in his fine bass voice; but he wrote in English with great purity ■ matters of affection and business long before middle life.

'From early in 1813, every Wednesday evening in March and April was given to a reception, half ■ conversazione and half a family party, in his large room, which then, ■ at other times, served ■ an exhibition of English and foreign books, maps, prints, woodcuts, lithographs, drawings, paintings, and other works of art and ornament, besides the leading Continental periodicals. There on those evenings, by annual invitation,¹ amateurs, artists, and authors were sure to find people whom they knew, or wanted to know. Many an introduction grew to an acquaintance; and the value of such evenings to foreigners was often gratefully acknowledged by travellers, who, with any distinction in art ■ literature, were welcome without any other introduction.

'His active assiduity and his spirited enterprise were suspended by a weak- ■ of sight, commencing from his charitable exertions in 1814, which made his repose at Camberwell, and afterwards at Ivy Lodge in the Fulham Road, first a matter of prudence, and later ■ of necessity. In the spring of 1830 he experienced ■ attack of paralysis, and never recovered sufficiently to exert his intelligence in business. He removed for a change of air to Finchley, but a second stroke produced ■ gradual decline of strength in the honourable old man; and March 30, 1834, ■ an end put to the hearty kindness, constant hospitality, and ■ beneficence which had been inseparable from his unquestioned integrity. He ■ interred ■ April ■ in the family grave, in the burial-ground of St. Clement Danes.'²

The little that remains to be recorded of the Caricaturist is best expressed by the kindly writer, a friend of nearly half a century's standing, who contributed an obituary notice of the artist to the Gentleman's Magazine (June 1827).

¹ According to Mr. Jerdan, the first missive printed on stone (drawings having been printed by this process some while before), was ■ invitation to one of Ackermann's conversaciones: 'Mr. Ackermann has the honour ■ inclose ■ card of invitation ■ a Literary Meeting ■ his Library, on Tuesday, the 20th February, ■ ■ o'clock in the evening; ■ ■ the ■ evening in each week, until the 10th day of April inclusive.

■ Notes and Queries, August 1869. See article signed W. P.

It is not generally known that, although a considerable proportion of Rowlandson's humorous political and social etchings are in many instances strongly tinged by the absence of refinement in taste, and are roughly executed—their aim simply of tiding over a pressing necessity, in providing funds for further relaxations—his early works were characterised by painstaking and conscientious application; and his studies from the human figure at the Royal Academy were scarcely inferior to the productions of Mortimer, then the most admired and proficient among the Academic professors.

From the versatility of his talent, the fecundity of his imagination, his command of composition, in which he equalled the greatest masters, the grace and elegance with which he could design his groups, added to the almost miraculous despatch with which he supplied his patrons with perfectly original compositions upon every subject, it was a theme of regret at his decease, that he had not sufficiently valued his reputation, to which it has been suspected he was thoroughly indifferent. It was universally admitted in his own days that, had he pursued the course of art steadily, he might have become one of the foremost and most celebrated historical painters of the English school. His style, which was purely his own, was unquestionably original. His bold, fluent, and spiritedly turned outlines were thrown off with easy dexterity, with his famous reed-pen, in a tint composed of vermilion and Indian-ink, the general effect was rapidly washed in, in order to produce an effective chiaro-oscuro, and the whole was coloured in tender tints with a most harmonious arrangement of colour.

His manner, though slight in almost every instance, is highly effective; and it is known with indubitable authority that the presidents of the Royal Academy, Sir Joshua Reynolds and Sir Benjamin West, whose criticisms were most foreign to those of the Caricaturist, individually asserted their conviction that many of his drawings would have done honour to Rubens, or to the most esteemed masters of design of the old schools.

For many years he was too indolent to seek new employment, and his kind friend, and it may be added with justice, his best adviser, Mr. Ackermann, the respected and leading publisher of Rowlandson's period, supplied him with ample subjects for the exercise of his talent. The many works which his pencil illustrated are existing evidence of this, and books containing impressions from Rowlandson's etchings continue to fetch high prices, and are industriously sought after. Many suggestions for plates have enlivened several editions of The Travels of Dr. Syntax, The Dance of Death, The Dance of Life, and other well-known productions of the pen of the prolific Coombe, the Defoe of the eighteenth century, will remain esteemed and lasting mementoes of his graphic humour.

It should be repeated that his reputation had never reached its full maturity in the life-time of Mr. Ackermann, his friend, patron, and publisher. The inimitable water-colour drawings of Rowlandson, of which he had a large collection, were justly appreciated by connoisseurs, and his folios have often been viewed with admiration and delight by the many professional artists and amateurs who frequented Mr. Ackermann's conversazioni at his library ■ the old house in the Strand. No artist of the past or present school, perhaps, ever expressed so much as Rowlandson, with ■ little effort, or with ■ evident an appearance of the absence of labour.

The artist's remains ■■■ followed to the grave by the two friends of his youth, John Bannister and Henry Angelo, and his constant friend and liberal employer, Rudolph Ackermann.

1774, 1780-81.

June 8, 1774. A Rotation Office.—A chief magistrate is seated at a table, and three justices, with their hats on, and sticks in their hands, seated beside him. To the left of the chief is the justice's clerk, and behind the bench is a placard, 'Robbery and Murder. Reward of Justice.'

THE VILLAGE DOCTOR

June 8, 1774. The Village Doctor. Published by H. Humphrey, Bond Street.—This print appears to have been about the earliest recognised specimen of Rowlandson's handiwork. The plate has ■ wash of aquatint, all ■ it, and the etching ■ free and bold. As ■ early work it evinces certain carefulness and discrimination, which promised well for the artist's future if he persevered in the ■ direction. The suggestion of the subject, according ■ the initials, is due ■ Henry Wigstead, whose name appears on numerous fine examples of Rowlandson's skill. The village practitioner, outside whose cottage is the sign of a gilt pestle, has evidently been disturbed under false pretences on previous occasions, and ■ a real client has knocked him up, for the benefit of his professional services, his indignation is bursting forth on the wrong object.

1780. Scene at Streatham. Bozzy and Piozzi.

BOZZY.

Who, mad'ning with ■ anecdotic itch,
Hath said that Johnson called his mother, witch?

MADAME PIOZZI.

Who, from Macdonald's rage to ■ his snout,
Cut twenty lines of defamation out?

The scene of this animated dispute is the Library ■ the house lately inhabited by the departed Thrale. Mrs. Piozzi (late Mrs. Thrale) and Boswell are in high dudgeon over their respective memoirs of their idol, the defunct Doctor Johnson. In both of their 'Lives' the trifling weaknesses of the great Lexicographer ■ made ridiculous, under the misguiding impulse of the 'anecdotic itch.' The rival biographers ■ bouncing and stamping about the study, in a fine rage, ready ■ pull one another ■ pieces. The learned lady's second husband, the stout musician, Piozzi, with his violoncello by his side, is seated in ■ easy chair, regarding the disputants with consternation, while deprecating violence.

Peter Pindar's lines ■ the subject are appended ■ the plate; an additional couplet or two ■ worth borrowing:—

BOZZY.

How could your folly tell, ■ void of truth,
That miserable story of the youth
Who, in your book, of Dr. Johnson begs,
Most seriously, to know if cats laid eggs?

MADAME PIOZZI.

■ told of Mrs. Montague the lie—
So palpable ■ falsehood? Bozzy, fy!

BOZZY.

Who would have ■ ■ word about Sam's wig:
Or told the story of the paws and pig?

MADAME PIOZZI.

Now for ■ saint upon us you would palm him ;
First murder the poor man, and then embalm him !

BOZZY.

His character ■ shockingly you handle—
You've sunk your comet to ■ farthing candle.

March 1780. Special Pleading. Published by A. McKenzie, 101 Berwick Street, Soho.

Lovely Nymph, assuage my anguish,
At your feet behold ■ swain,
Begg you will not let him languish ;
One kind word will ■■■ his pain.

A stout knight (possibly ■ lineal descendant of Sir John Falstaff) is the Pleaser ; he is lounging ■ ■ elegant sofa of the early Georgian period, making inane love to ■ pretty girl placed by his side, dressed in ■ picturesque Watteau-like costume, with a quilted petticoat and ■ quaint mob-cap added ; the amorous old trifle's hand is on the slim waist of the beauty ; the damsel ■ standing up in ■ negligently easy pose, while she ■ toying with her antiquated admirer and waving his enormous and elaborately curled double-tailed wig in the air. A dog is at her side. The drawing of this picture is unusually graceful and easy, even for Rowlandson ; this is most noticeable in respect ■ the pretty coquette. The etching is spirited and brilliant, and the background and accessories are delicately aquatinted, ■ bear out the resemblance to ■ sketch in Indian ink.

July 18, 1780. The School of Eloquence.—The interior of ■ fashionable debating society of the period ; the members ■ the quality of both ■■■■■. The design ■■■ doubtless admirably worked out in the original drawing ; but it has suffered at the hands of ■ unknown etcher. Published by Archibald Robertson, Savile Passage.

September 1, 1780. Italian Affectation. Pacchierolti.—The figures of two distinguished foreigners, ■ imported into this country over ■ century ago, for the delectation of the cognoscendi and the leaders of high taste. A pair of overdressed Italian artists, extravagantly posturing to one another in some operatic ■■■■■. A spindle-shanked signor, hat in hand, is pouring out his ardour ■ ■ affected and modish prima donna in a love-making situation, outrageously burlesqued.

September 18, 1780. Sir Samuel House.—The full-length portrait of 'Honest Sam House,' famous in his day for his zeal and patriotism, the enthusiastic supporter of Fox, ■ character familiar ■ all the electors of Westminster, as an indefatigable canvasser ■■ behalf of the 'Friend of the People;' during the ■■■■ for Westminster, Sam kept open house for the friends of the Whig chief, and entertained ■■ the notabilities of the Whig party. Summer and winter, Sam dressed in ■ clean nankeen jacket and breeches, and brightly polished shoes and buckles; he ■■ no covering, neither hat nor wig, ■■ a perfectly bald head; his waistcoat was constantly open in all seasons, and he wore remarkably white linen; his legs were generally bare, but when covered, it was always in stockings of the finest silk.

In Rowlandson's spirited portrait old Sam is standing in his sturdy fashion, clean, shaven, and bright, in his eccentric costume, with his shining round poll, a pot with his cipher in one hand, and his pipe in the other. In the ■■ is shown his public-house, with smokers and customers indicated at the windows. This portrait, which ■■■■ to have been deservedly popular, ■■■■ published with variations. In ■■ impression (printed in sepia), is ■ barrel inscribed 'No Pope,' and in another, 'Fox for ever! Huzza!' The second plate is crossed with very fine stipple, and an old man is introduced in the background with his hand on his bald head.

The prints ■■ signed with the initials T. R. and J. J., and were published by Thomas Rowlandson and J. Jones ■■ 103 Wardour Street. Under some impressions is the inscription, 'The first man who jumped off Westminster Bridge.'

■■■ HOUSE.

Not ■■■■ the great Sam House, with horror, star'd,
By mob affronted to the very beard;
Whose impudence (enough to damn a jail)
Snatch'd from his waving hand his fox's tail,
And stuff'd it, 'midst his thunders of applause,
Full in the centre of Sam's gaping jaws;
That, forcing down his patriotic throat,
Of 'Fox and freedom!' stopp'd the glorious note.

November 13, 1780. Naval Triumph, or Favours Conferred.—Admiral Keppel is riding in triumph through the gates of Greenwich Hospital, mounted on the shoulders of ■ veteran salt, on crutches, who has lost both ■ eye and his legs in the service of his country. The Admiral, with his riband and star, is condescending to give a helping hand to another naval commander, who is dancing in merrily by his side.

The shake of the hand with such goodness and grace
Shows who ■ in favour, and who is in place.
At Greenwich the invalids poor will proclaim What at present ■■ do ■■ think proper to ■■■■

Poor disabled sailors ■■■ limping off on their crutches, disgusted with the results of their sacrifices and the miserable rewards for their services ; while ■ drummer is drubbing in their favoured and well requited commanders.

■■■ OF ■■■■

The composition of this subject is particularly good, and it is worthy of remark that, in the coloured impressions of this print, the tinting is arranged with considerable success, and although, as is the general practice with caricatures, but the vivid colours employed, the arrangement is good and delicate that the general effect is harmonious and artistic as in the original drawings by Rowlandson's own hand.

June 30, 1781. The Power of Reflection. Published by J. Harris, Sweeting's Alley, Cornhill.—This print is executed in mezzotint by J. Jones, whose name appears several times in connection with that of Rowlandson, the series of plates which shall particularise in the progress of this work. The contrast is very marked between the Duenna, the lines of whose face have fallen in under the assaults of time, and the demoiselle, in all the pride of youth and attractiveness, aided by the bravery of a fashionable and piquante toilette. The Power of Reflection is probably intended to suggest a pictorial pun. While the maiden is absorbed in the pleasing reflection of her figure thrown back in the mirror, her senior, with ponderous and probably serious volume before her, is employing her thoughts contemplations of a more philosophical description.

October 28, 1781. E O, the Fashionable Vowels.—It may be noticed, respecting the earlier works of Rowlandson, that his efforts, after he left the Academy, marked with more care and elaboration than his later etchings; while the effects of his training still fresh in his mind, he evidently took pains in the direction of finish, and it is particularly in his management of chiaro-oscuro that we detect the superiority of the artistic productions of his first period; although experience alone could give him that special freedom and facility which render his best-known productions remarkable.

In the early and clear impressions of the E O Table, and its surroundings, the artist's skill is even more conspicuous than usual in the spirited grouping; the attitudes and expressions of the several gamblers distinct with individuality and strongly-marked traits of character. Every variety of emotion—cunning, credulity, confidence, anxiety, stolid indifference, scheming, craft, stupidity, hectoring, exaltation, and despair—we find pictured with ability which surprises us, contrasting as it does with the indifferent caricatures and the dearth of humorous talent in the years which intervened between the death of Hogarth and the appearance of the more ambitious subjects by Gillray and Rowlandson, works executed while the talents of these masters were at their best, and before they had grown careless of their reputation.

The *E O Table*¹ republished at various dates: in January 1786

¹ From Malcolm's and Customs of London during the Eighteenth Century (1810). 'Mr. Carlton, Deputy Clerk of Peace, and Clerk to the Justices of Westminster, stated a Committee of House of Commons, in 1782, that E O Tables very numerous; that house in parish of St. Anne, Soho, contained five, and there were more than three hundred in the above parish of St. James's. used every day of week, and servants enticed them by cards of direction thrown down the areas.'

appeared with ■ new title, as Private Amusement, and from time ■ time it was reissued, the date of publication being altered ■ suit the several occasions.

E O, ■ THE

E O Tables.—‘In the year 1781 there ■■■■■ of E O Tables in different parts of the town, where a poor man with a shilling only might try his luck. They were open ■ everybody, ■ ■ last the Bow Street police began to interfere.'

An attempt was made, ■ the commencement of 1731, to suppress ■■■ of the ■■■ considerable gaming-houses in London and the suburbs, particularly one, behind Gray's Inn Walks. The editor of the St. James's Evening Post observed upon this occasion: 'It may be matter of instruction ■ well as amusement to present ■ readers with the following list of officers which ■ established in the ■■■ notorious gaming-houses:—

'A Commissioner, always a proprietor, who looks in of ■ night; the week's account ■ audited by him and two others of the proprietors.

'A Director, who superintends the ■■■■

'An Operator, who deals the cards ■ ■ cheating game called Faro.

'Two Croupées, who watch the cards and gather the money for the bank.

'Two Puffs, who have money given them ■ decoy others ■ play.

'A Clerk, who is ■ check upon the Puffs, to ■■ that they sink none of the money given them to play with.

'A Squib is ■ Puff of a lower rank, who serves at half-salary while he is learning to deal.

'A Flasher, to swear how often the bank has been stripped.

'A Dunner, who goes about to recover money lost ■ play.

'A Waiter, to fill out wine, snuff candles, and attend in the gaming-room.

'An Attorney, a Newgate solicitor,

'A Captain, who is to fight any gentleman that is peevish for losing his money.

'An Usher, who lights gentlemen up and down stairs, and gives the word to the porter.

'A Porter, who is generally a soldier of the Foot Guards.

'An Orderly-man, who walks up and down the outside of the door, ■ give notice to the porter and alarm the house at the approach of constables.

'A Runner, who is ■ get intelligence of the Justices meeting.

'Link-boys, watchmen, chairmen, drawers, or others, who bring the first intelligence of the Justices' meetings, or of the constables being out—half-a-guinea reward.

'Common-bail, affidavit-men, ruffians, bravoës, ■■ multis aliis.'

November 27, 1781. Brothers of the Whip. A. Grant, del.: published by H. Humphrey.—In this engraving a good deal of Rowlandson's ■■■ is traceable, and the etching is ■ least due to his hand. The subject represents ■ group of four brothers of ■ whip, whose persons and features ■■ marked with that discrimination for character and faculty for grasping individual peculiarities distinctive of the caricaturist. In ■■ background are figured coach-horses, ■■ riages, saddle-horses, grooms, &c., ■■ depicted in his own marked style.

November 27, 1781. Charity Covereth a Multitude of Sins, published by H. Humphrey.—A dashing young officer is roving, in pursuit of pleasure, in a dangerous vicinity. With a generous hand he is dropping a gold-piece into the hat of a reduced sailor. Two Savoyards, a man with an organ, and a girl with a hurdygurdy are soliciting the contributions of the charitable.

JOE DANNY, NEWMARKET

December 10, 1781. The Slate Watchman Discovered by the Genius of Great Britain Studying Plans for the Reduction of America, published by J. Jones.—This subject is engraved within a circle, and, in point of execution, it bears some resemblance to Rowlandson's later style, it is unlike Gillray's work of the same date.

The somnolent Lord North is asleep on his sofa, dreaming, according to the caricaturist, of theories for the recovery of America.

The figure of Britannia, with her staff and cap of Liberty, well designed, she crying, 'Am I thus protected?' A miniature figure introduced, who is endeavouring arrest the sleeper's attention—'Hallo, neighbour! what, you asleep?' This officious person is, it is believed, intended represent 'Sir Grey Parole.'¹

No date. Bob Derry, of Newmarket.

No date. Luxury.

LUXURY.

¹ Lord North's Administration, which the onus of conducting the American War, daily growing weaker and losing popularity; it resigned in of the year following, the Rockingham Ministry into office. The first condition of this more liberal Administration had obtained, through negotiations of Lord Shelburne, consent of the King to 'peace with the Americans, and acknowledgment of their independence.' In a caricature by Gillray, which appeared on the resignation of Lord North—Bancro Know, April 12, 1782—the figure Grey Cooper, one of the Treasury Secretaries, is introduced, exclaiming, 'I a new master.' On this gentleman's chair is the name 'Sir Grey Parole,' because, it is understood, he usually sat on the left of Lord North Treasury; and when that statesman, who trusted memory the principal points elicited in the debates, had been by constitutional somnolency which was a favourite subject of ridicule with satirists, Secretary aroused his chief, and supplied deficiency by suggesting of argument, or parole, as required.

1782-83.

February 1783. Long Sermons and Long Stories — apt to lull the Senses.
Published by W. Humphrey.

1783. Amputation. Republished by S. W. Fores, October 17, 1793.

AMPUTATION.

1783 (?). The Rhedarium, for the Sale of all sorts of Carriages, by Gregory Gigg.—The auctioneer is in his pulpit, employed in knocking down ■ assort-
■ of vehicles ■ ■ small but sufficiently eccentric-looking audience. A gouty individual, propped ■ crutches, is making a bid for ■ antiquated kind of cabriolet, which the groom ■ trotting up for inspection; around ■ curricles, travelling carriages, and ■ general assemblage of the machines on wheels representative of the past.

1783. The Discovery.—A small political print, ■ parody ■ Shakespeare's 'Macbeth.' Lord North, who is the principal agent of the 'Witches' Incantation,' is crying :—

Call Fiends and Spectres from the yawning deep.

BURKE

(who is among the witches).

Cast in your mite, each midnight hag ;
Fill the Protector's poisoned Bag.

■ WILSON.

Here's old Nick's nose.

JEFFREY.

Here's Devil's dung.

DUNSTAN.

The wind of Boreas,
Belial's tongue,
A Traitor's heart.

SAM HOUSE

And Gabbets' blocks.
■ hold, ye hags, for here comes Fox.

Fox

(who suddenly entered, and standing in his ordinary declamatory attitude).

And the ministers of Hell work.

December 22, 1783. Great Cry and Little Wool. Published by Humphrey, Strand.—Somewhat in Sayer's style, the principal figures giving indications of his ■■■■ The personification of Evil, with his horns, hoofs, pointed claws, and forked tail, has a firm hold of Fox, and is shearing the 'Protector's' chest and clawing at his profuse locks. The India Bill, under the Evil One's arm, indicates the ■■■■ of the satire. The surroundings ■■■■ especially in Rowlandson's free handling; the India House ■■■■ in the background, and the members of ■■■■

■■■■ CLOCKMAKER'S SHOP

East India Corporation are performing ■ gleeful dance around ■ memorable pile—the funeral pyre in effigy of their arch-enemy, treated ■ ■ fox roasting on ■ gibbet.

1783 (?). The Times.—This caricature represents the situation, from ■ popular point of view, at the period of the struggle for the Regency which occurred ■ the first illness of the King. According ■ Rowlandson's print, right is prevailing and everything is to be settled for the future happiness of the kingdom by the Prince of Wales's accession to the throne; ■ will be remembered, it ■ for ■ short period doubtful whether the King's health would ever be sufficiently restored ■ enable him ■ ■ the control of the State.

The heir-apparent is shown ■ the virtuous prince ■ read of in fairy tales, endowed with all the graces both of mind and person. The Prince is supported, at the foot of the throne, by such protection ■ Liberty and Justice ■ placing at his disposal; his foot is ■ the first step, the Voice of the People; the other steps are Public Safety, Patriotism, and Virtue; the ■ remains suspended over his head, his right hand is on his heart, and Britannia is leading him ■ his place, while she is waving back the party which opposed his assumption of ■ ad interim Regency. The symbolical Ruler of the Waves is declaring: 'I have long been deceived by hypocrisy, but have ■ last discovered an intention of sacrificing the rights of my people to satisfy a private ambition.' The Queen and her German friends, Madame Schwellenberg and others, are represented as disconcerted Furies, waving hissing snakes, and begirt with Falsehood, Envy, &c.

Queen Charlotte combined with Pitt to oppose, by every stratagem within their power, the assumption of the Regency by her eldest ■. The Queen is brandishing the torch of Rebellion; Pitt is thrown into despair, and he is 'bidding a long farewell to all his greatness,' before his retirement from public life, as reasonably might have been his case, if the Prince's party had come into power. Commerce, allegorically represented as ■ fair female, is applauding the elevation of the Prince ■ the ■ throne, and ■ deputation from the Corporation of the City ■ expressing these encouraging sentiments through the Lord Mayor:— 'Whilst we mourn the occasion, ■ ■ feel ourselves happy in reflecting that ■ ■ blessed by ■ prince whose wisdom will protect our liberties, whose virtues will afford stability ■ ■ empire.'

1784.

POLITICAL CARICATURES.

A ■■■ examples of the caricatures published by Rowlandson during the famous contested election for Westminster in 1784 were included by the present writer in his account of the works of James Gillray the Caricaturist, ■■■ certain prints issued ■■■ this occasion ■■■ doubtless due to a combination on the part of the two caricaturists; however, those plates which bear special indications of Rowlandson's style ■■■ set down to their proper author.

January 1, 1784. The Pit of Acheron, or the Birth of the Plagues of England.—This plate bears the initials F. N., 1784, in the right-hand corner, but there is ■■■ doubt, judging from the evidence of the style of execution, that the chief merit is due to Rowlandson. During the progress of the struggle, in 1784, plates innumerable ■■■ published anonymously, or with varying initials. Collectors who have devoted time and observation to the subject, and such well-qualified writers ■■■ the compiler of The History of Caricature and Grotesque in Art, The Caricature History of the Georges, &c., ■■■ agreed upon the proportion of prints which are due to the skill of our artist, whose handiwork is very prominent amongst the series of electioneering and political satires which appeared ■■■ the occasion of Fox's renowned campaign at the Westminster hustings, when the Champion of the People contended successfully against the second Ministerial candidate, Sir Cecil Wray, although the latter received all the assistance ■■■ which Pitt, with the influence of the King as well, unscrupulously exercised as it was, could bring into play, legitimately ■■■ otherwise, to defeat the popular Whig chief, and to inflict the mortification of a lost election upon 'the party' and ■■■ their leader, who ■■■ at that time the pet aversion of George the Third and idol of the people.

It will be remembered that Rowlandson was by no means ■■■ party satirist; unlike Sayer, who ■■■ notoriously in the Ministerial pay, he lavished his satire ■■■ both sides alternately, utterly regardless of partisanship, and, often ■■■ the ■■■ pence of consistency, ■■■ find his ■■■ alternately espousing and ridiculing the same section, Whig ■■■ Tory, Ministerialist ■■■ Opposition, in plates of whimsically opposite tendencies, which ■■■ infrequently bear the ■■■ date.

The Pit of Acheron, if ■ may ■ the satirist, is not situated ■ any ■ siderable distance from Westminster; the precincts of that city appear through the smoke of the incantations which ■ carried ■ in the Pit. Three weird sisters, ■ the Witches in 'Macbeth,' are working the famous charm; ■ ■ ■ cauldron is supported by death's-heads and harpies; the ingredients of the broth are various; ■ crucifix, ■ rosary, Deceit, Loans, Lotteries, and Pride, together with ■ fox's head, cards, dice, daggers, and an executioner's axe, &c., form portions of the accessories employed in these uncanny rites. Three heads are rising from the flames—the good-natured face of Lord North, the spectacled and incisive outline of Burke, and Fox's 'gunpowder jowl,' which is drifting Westminster-wards. One hag, who is dropping Rebellion into the brew, is demanding, 'Well, sister, what hast thou got for the ingredients of ■ charm'd pot?' To this her fellow-witch, who is turning out certain mischievous ingredients which she has collected in her bag, is responding, 'A beast from Scotland called an Erskine, famous for duplicity, low art, and cunning; the other ■ monster who'd spurn even ■ Charter's Rights.' Erskine is shot out of the bag, crying, 'I am like ■ Proteus, can turn to any shape, from a sailor to a lawyer, and always lean ■ the strongest side!' The other member, whose tail is that of ■ serpent, is singing, 'Over the water and over the lee, thro' hell I would follow my Charlie.'

January 4, 1784. The Fall of Dagon, or Rare News for Leadenhall Street. Published by William Humphrey, 227 Strand.

And behold Dagon ■ fallen upon his face ■ the ground before the ark of the Lord, and the head of Dagon and both the palms of his hands ■ cut off upon the threshold.

The image of Dagon, which in this case is borrowed to typify the Coalition Ministers, has fallen from the overset Broad Bottom pedestal, and is in the posture described by the quotation; its double-faced head ■ the profiles of North and Fox. Tower Hill is represented in the background; a scaffold is erected, and the public executioner is just bringing down his ■ on the neck of ■ traitor—a delicate compliment to the heads of the late Administration. John Bull has changed the sign of his house to The Axe, and he is composedly enjoying his pipe under its shadow.

January 7, 1784. The Loves of the Fox and the Badger, or the Coalition Wedding. Published by W. Humphrey, 227 Strand.—Nine small compartments, very neatly executed upon ■ plate, are employed to portray the unpopular Coalition Ministry between Fox and North. (1) The Fox beats the Badger in the Bear Garden. The unwieldy form of the Badger (Lord North) lies, apparently asleep, ■ the floor of 'the House;' the Fox, with ■ brush ■ in triumph, is in command of the situation. (2) The Fox has been throwing dice on Hounslow

Heath, and he has ■ dream; the vision seems ■ indicate ■ choice between a prison ■ ■ traitor's head on a spike. (3) The Badger, with his riband, tucked up comfortably on ■ sofa, also indulges in ■ dream; the objects offered for his selection are seemingly the gallows or an executioner's block. (4) Satan unites them; the arch-fiend, in person, is joining their paws and pronouncing the magic spell, 'Necessity.' (5) They quarter their arms. Their new escutcheon is symbolical; above ■ scroll marked 'Money' the twin supporters ■ holding up ■ well-filled Treasury-bag, borne by John Bull, above whose head flourishes ■ pair of donkey's ■ ■ (6) The priest advertises the wedding. The Devil, presiding ■ the pay-table, ■ enlisting the advocacy of the press, and three editors, in return for substantial considerations, ■ respectively promising: 'I'll Chronicle the Coalition,' 'We will Post them,' 'Harry will take both sides.' (7) The Honeymoon ■ Eddystone Lighthouse; the pair ■ making up ■ flaming beacon. (8) The New Orator Henley, ■ the Churching. The happy pair ■ now in their glory, seated on ■ throne in the 'Bear Garden,' and surrounded ■ ■ respectful distance by the heads (stuck on poles) of the members of their new Parliament, and described as ■ 'Mopstick majority.' The churching is proceeding; the original pastor is still present, and is prompting Orator Henley, whose tub stands on a block, labelled, 'Honest Jack Lee;' the Orator is holding forth a parchment, and declaring, 'A charter is nothing but ■ piece of parchment with a great seal dangling to it;' to which pious deduction his clerk mounted on 'A Seat for Portsmouth,' is crying, 'Necessity. Amen.' (9.) The Wedding Dance and Song. The pair, now led by the ■ by their Satanic friend, are perforce compelled to execute ■ pretty lively dance, ■ their conductor wills. They ■ singing this appropriate epithalamium :—

Come, we're all Rogues together ;
The people must pay for the play :
Then let us make Hay in fine weather,
And keep the cold winter away !

It seemed, at the beginning of 1784, as if Fox ■ completely master of the political situation, and indeed he approached much ■ to ■ absolute control of the Administration than he ■ ever destined to reach again during the lifetime of his great opponent. The bold manœuvres of Pitt, backed by the royal favour—the King and his friends condescending ■ dissimulation and subterfuge where honest policy would not suffice their turn—were crowned with unexpected ■ cess, and the Cromwell of the hour ■ suddenly from his influential eminence. Up ■ the famous Westminster Election, Fox ■ paramount, both in Parliament and out of doors; for although Pitt was actually Crown Minister, both he and his party were almost powerless when arrayed against the members of the ex-Coalition Ministry, their opponents, led by Fox, and his strong following, who were the real masters of the situation; thus we find a very characteristic portrait of the Friend of Liberty and of the People introduced, with an allusion to Cromwell.

January 19, 1784. His Highness the Protector.—The supplies are kept with a tight hand; and Fox, taking advantage of his power, has put a huge padlock on the door of the Treasury, the key of which he seems determined to retain in his own keeping; a small dagger, held in the popular champion's right hand, indicates that he is prepared to stand on the defensive. His colleague Lord North, with his arm round his neck, appears as a bulldog, who is supporting his leader in keeping the supplies inviolate.

The apprehensions of the Pittites (whose chances of retaining the reins of administration in defiance of Opposition too strong for their policy, seemed desperate), pictured forth the total subversion of Throne and State; and it was under this influence that the King—whose stubborn will was strengthened by contradiction—indulged his threat of retiring to his German possessions, if he could not secure the return to office of his particular friends, whose hopes of recovering their lost control of the State were somewhat forlorn previous to the election; while Fox, on the other hand, was endeavouring to force the King to accede to the measures he had introduced for the restriction of the royal prerogative. A very complete, but necessarily over-coloured, view of the anticipations of 'the party' is thus pictured forth by Rowlandson.

January 23, 1784. The Times, or a View of the Old House in Little Britain,—with Nobody going to Hanover. Published by W. Humphrey, 227 Strand.—The Old House is seemingly in a bad way; the foundation is Public Credit; the Funds, represented as a grilled gate, are secured with a huge padlock; the Royal Crown and Sceptre are placed on a block, and marked for sale; seated on another block, labelled Protector, sits the fox, guarding the Treasury; round his waist is a chain secured to the Coalition-pillar, which is depicted rather a twisted support. Lord North has perched his unwieldy person upon a turnstile, and is crying, indifferent to consequences, 'Give me my ease, and do as you please.' The upper part of the Old House is raising more cause for mistrust, since the old building is overweighted and crushed with a mass of Taxes, piled on the roof, the accumulated pressure of 'the accursed ten years' American war, fomented by the Opposition and misconducted by a timid Minister.' A light balcony has been thrown out, and therein things are proceeding in true showman style. Burke is officiating as exhibitor, and blowing through a trumpet; another statesman is doing the harlequin-business; merry-andrew 'Sherry' is flourishing his bottle and dancing round the corner of the balcony, on which is a placard announcing a wonderful combination of attractions: 'The Scarlet Woman of Babylon, the Devil, and the Pope.' 'The Man of the People' is pictured as a feather,—on the flag of the party. The sign of the Ola House, Magna Charta, has fallen ■ tatters, and the board is dropping down ; two lawyers, who appear ■ the window, ■ repairing the edifice according to their theories ; one of the props of the edifice, the Lords, is spared, but the other, prerogative of the Crown, is being lopped off by one of the legal magnates. The King is turning his back ■ the place, and starting in ■ ■ coach on his way ■ Hanover, deaf and blind ■ the prayers of some of his subjects, who ■ imploring the royal compassion on their knees. The Sun of England's Glory is setting in the distance, and an eye of light, piercing through the clouds, is warning the retiring monarch to 'Turn out these robbers and repair the House.'

February 3. The Infant Hercules.—Another caricature ■ directed against the ex-Coalition Ministers, representing them ■ twin serpents whose tails ('American War' and 'East India Bill') ■■ entwined ; the heads of Fox and North appear ■ the shoulders of the monster. Pitt is figured ■ the infant Hercules ; he has taken his seat on the 'Shield of Chatham,' and has grasped the throats of the serpents, the tails of which are already lopped off. 'These,' he cries, 'were your Ministers.'

Lord North, for twelve years, with his war and contracts,
The people he nearly had ■ on their backs ;
Yet stoutly he swore he sure was a villain
If e'er he had bettered his fortune a shilling.

Derry down, down ; down, derry down.

Against him Charles Fox was a ■ bitter foe,
And cried that the empire he'd soon overthrow ;
Before him all honour and conscience had fled ;
And vowed that the axe it should cut off his head.

Derry down, down ; down, derry down.

Edmund Burke, too, was in ■ mighty great rage,
And declared Lord North the disgrace of the age ;
His plans and his conduct he treated with scorn,
And thought it ■ ■ that he'd ■ been born.

Derry down, down ; down, derry down.

So hated he was, Fox and Burke they both swore,
They infamous ■ if they enter'd his door ;
But, prithee, good neighbour, now think on the end—
Both Burke and Fox call him their very good friend !

Derry down, down ; down, derry down.

Now Fox, North, and Burke, each one is a brother,
So honest, they ■ there is not such another ;
No longer they tell us we're going to ruin,
The people they ■ in whatever they're doing.

Derry down, down ; down, derry down.

But Chatham, thank heaven! ■■■ ■■ ■ son,
 When ■ takes the helm, we are sure not undone;
 The glory his father revived of the land,
 And Britannia has taken ■ Pitt by the hand.
 Derry down, down; down, derry down.

BRITANNIA ROUSED, OR THE COALITION MONSTERS DESTROYED.

February 3, 1784. Britannia Roused, or the Coalition Monsters Destroyed.—
 Britannia, the symbolical goddess, is fairly aroused, and her greatness and power ■ effectually asserted ■ the persons of the late Ministers. Her strong arm ■ throttling the lethargic Lord North, and she has seized the body of Fox, whose person she is dashing ■ her head, in ■ manner which threatens the extinction of the popular idol.

The East India Company and its Corporation became, for a time, the chief bone of contention. Fox had gone out of office on the rejection of his provisions for the proper regulation of the Eastern Empire,¹ and Pitt, on coming into power, introduced his own motion with the same object. The view of public opinion on this point was expressed by Rowlandson's satirical summary of the situation.

February 7, 1784. Billy Lackbeard and Charley Blackbeard Playing at Football.—Fox and Pitt are both kicking with a will; the football is the old House of John Company, Leadenhall Street; the edifice is turned upside down, and the rival players are succeeding in keeping the vast structure suspended in the air between them. Billy Lackbeard has just turned from the study of Blackstone, —an allusion to the youth of the Prime Minister. It is interesting to remember that Pitt had resigned his ambitious mind seriously to the study and practice of the law, in the progress of events should deprive him of Parliamentary significance. The commencement of his career was somewhat troublous, especially during the 'Regency struggle,' when the state of the King's health rendered the accession of the Prince of Wales probable, in which case the governing power would have remained in the hands of his experienced rival. Behind Fox is a dicebox, and on his feet lie packs of playing-cards, indicating that gambling was the only resource left him, if he could not succeed in regaining office.

The influence which was being brought to bear, through illegitimate channels, to strengthen the party of Pitt's followers, who found themselves in such a minority to be powerless at first, was recognised and commented on out of doors. The satirists freely exposed the Ministerial manoeuvres; it was evident that the Court party, and especially the King, would count no sacrifice too great, could they but contrive to prevent the return of the members of the late Coalition Ministry to power, this hostility being intensified by the prejudices borne in the royal mind against Fox.

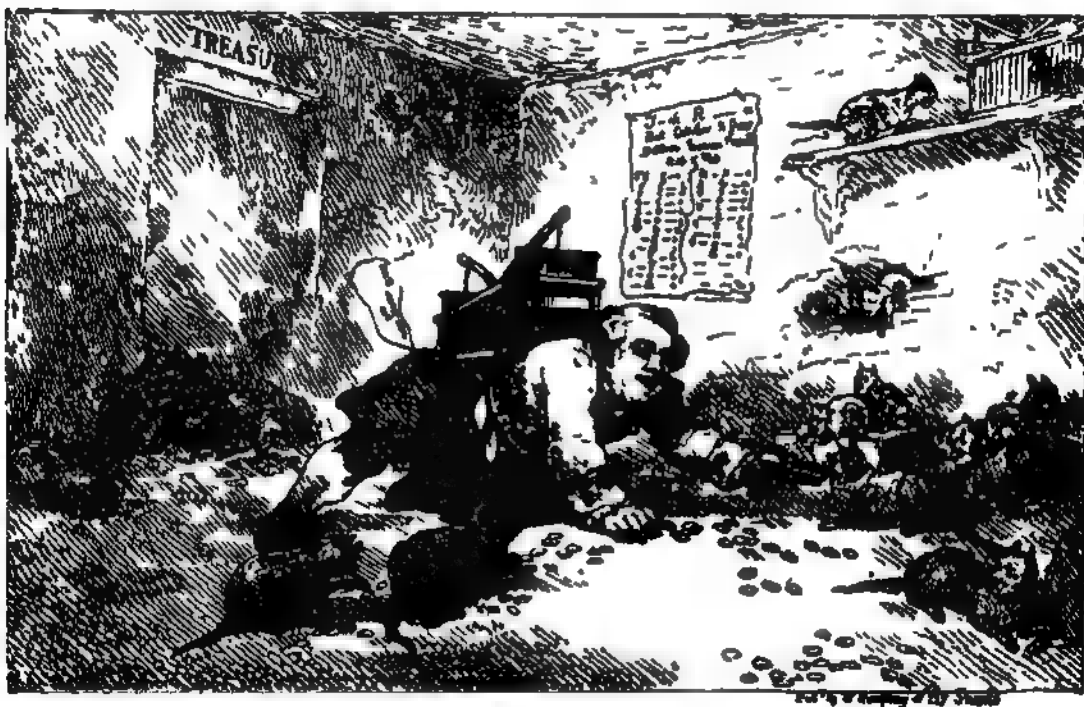

So strongly did this influence work that we find in The Morning Post and Daily Advertiser for February 10, 1784, the names of twenty-two members who had fallen under the spell of Ministerial beguilements. The advertisement is quite simple, and appears without either comment or explanation; the heading is pictorial, and represents a string of rats—such as might preface an ordinary rat-catcher's advertisement—it is placed above the signature of Jack Robinson, in capital letters. Then follow, in three short columns, the names of the twenty-two Parliamentary members who had gone down to the good pickings which the King was able ■ hold forth ■ ■ temptation in return for the allegiance of these renegades.

¹ 'General Johnson reminded Mr. Fox that he had undertaken to bring another India Bill. Mr. Fox did not deny that he had said he could have his Bill ready within a day or two—he said so still; but, at that time, there was not, in present, any Government—any strong, and efficient, and constitutional Government—he thought it would be absurd to insist on the discussion of any Bill; since, whatever it might be, it would be carried into execution.'—Morning Post, Feb. 9, 1784.

This curious advertisement is repeated in ■ satirical print which Rowlandson prepared ■ the ■ subject.

March 1, 1784. The Apostate Jack Robinson, the Political Rat-catcher. N.B. Rats taken alive.—Before the door of the Treasury, from whence the converter of ■ draws his supply of baits and lures, travelling cautiously ■ all fours and feeling his way, the political rat-catcher is silyly augmenting his captures. Round the apostate Jack's waist hangs the cestus of corruption, in his pocket is ■ little aide-de-camp, who is made to cry, 'We'll ferret them out!' On his back is a double trap, baited with miniature coronets, places, &c.; ■ ■ ■ have been secured in this; golden pieces ■ the floor, and with these the ■ ■ be captured ■ playing and coquetting. A large bait of pension is held to the nose of ■ grave old veteran, probably intended for Edmund Burke, and the other ■ ■ watching the bait with longing looks. A placard is pinned ■ the wall, 'Jack Robinson, Rat-catcher ■ Great Britain. Vermin preserved.' Under the heading of 'Rats of Note' ■ given the very list of apostates as published in the Morning Post, beneath Jack Robinson's patronymic.

THE APOSTATE JACK ROBINSON, THE POLITICAL RAT-CATCHER.

Second Title.

Thus when Renegado ■ ■ Rat
 In the traps in the morning taken,
 With pleasure he goes Master Pitt to pat,
 And swears he ■ ■ have his bacon.

March 3, 1784. A Peep into Friar Bacon's Study.—A spectacle of conjuration, which discloses matters of some historical moment. In the centre of the picture stands the brazen head which is giving forth its oracles. King George the Third, who has thrown ■ conjuror's cloak over his star and riband, is holding out two divining-rods, and questioning the head—'What is this?' To this the magic bust is giving forth these oracle-like phrases: 'Time is, Time was, Time is past;' while three luminous circles, each bordered with the word Constitution, help to illuminate the obscurity of the revelation. The first view of the Constitution, 'Time is past,' displays the King ■ his throne, with a radiance like the sun; the other bodies of the State barely ■ within the charmed circle; the Houses of Lords and Commons appear ■ 'air balloons.' 'Time is' offers another view of the Constitution; the King's circle has diminished, that of the House of Peers is increasing in magnitude and becoming bound up with the royal circle; the House of Commons, without infringing ■ either, has arrived within the circumference of the Constitution; and in the third view ■ find the three circles assimilated in size and working one within the other—the Constitution in its perfected form, in fact. Behind the King the members of the late Ministry are appearing ■ a door. Fox, North, and Burke are in the front rank; they bid the monarch 'Beware!' The King's friends, led by an imp of Satan, or, perhaps, by the Devil in person, are finding their way down the back-stairs. Foremost is a figure bearing ■ lantern, which is throwing ■ light ■ the movements of the Opposition. Lord Temple, and other influential supporters of the Ministry, ■ making their entry ■ the scene, and crying, 'We must destroy this coalition,' 'A fig for the resolutions,' &c.

March 8, 1784. Master Billy's Procession to Grocers' Hall.—Pitt has, according to the picture, supplemented his Parliamentary tactics by flattering the citizens, and bidding for the Corporation influence. He is drawn going to Grocers' Hall in state to receive the freedom of the City in ■ gold box, which is carried ■ the head of the procession. Great enthusiasm prevails, ■ ■ liberal gentleman, in the uniform of ■ naval officer, is distributing handfuls of coin amongst the mob. Banners are carried in the procession with the party watchwords, 'Pitt and prerogative,' and 'Youth is ■ most ■ crime.' The car of Sir Watney, drawn by satyrs ■ first; then, in the middle, perched up in ■ triumphal car, and with a feather in his hat, comes Master Billy, drawn, of course, by King's ■ Sir Barney follows, drawn by his admirers, and shouting, 'Pitt and plum-pudding for ever!' The show ■ passing the shop of 'Tommy Plume, grocer to his Majesty;' this worthy, who is crying, 'O what ■ charming youth!' is ■ at his window, surrounded by shouting spectators. At the sign of the Lord Chatham is gathered another party of sightseers; they ■ enthusiastically declaring that 'Master Pitt is very like his father!'

March 11, 1784. The Champion of the People.—The sturdy figure of Fox, clad in somewhat theatrical armour, and protected by the Shield of Truth, is resolutely combating the overgrown Hydra of patronage, whose growing and unconstitutional power—it ■ hinted—would shortly destroy the liberty of the subject. The monster, ■ compound of the Pittite party and its royal supporter, ■ hissing and spitting venom with ■ its various heads, Tyranny, Assumed Prerogative, Despotism, Oppression, Secret Influence, and Scotch Politics; while three heads have been already lopped off by the champion's sword, Duplicity and Corruption ■ laid in the dust. The foreign Powers are represented in alliance, and dancing round the Standard of Sedition. Natives, of the subject East Indian races, ■ kneeling and blessing their champion; and a compact array of English and Irish supporters is drawn up under the standard of 'Britannia and Universal Liberty.' Fox's followers ■ respectively declaring, 'While he protects us, we will support him;' and 'He gave ■ a free trade, and all ■ asked; he shall have ■ firm support!'

BILLY'S PROCESSION TO GROCER'S HALL.

March 26, 1784. The State Auction.—This print illustrates the [] to which, [] it [] assumed, the Constitution was coming under the evil effects of the undue extension of the royal prerogative. The 'State Auction' is held, under high patronage, in the 'Commission warehouse; money advanced [] all sorts of useless valuables, by Pitt and Co., Auctioneers. N.B. Licensed by Royal Authority.' Pitt, seated [] his rostrum, under the royal arms, is knocking down 'State property' in the capacity of auctioneer. The first lot is, it seems, the [] interesting one in the sale: 'The Rights of the People, in 558 volumes.' Pitt's friend Dundas is acting as sale porter. 'Show the lot this way, Harry,' cries the auctioneer. 'Agoing, agoing; speak quick, [] it's gone. Hold up the lot, ye Dund ass!' To which invitation the Scot, Dundas, who has been doing his best [] help Master Pitt, responds, 'I can hould it [] higher, sir!' Pitt is favouring the biddings of the 'Hereditary Virtuosi,' a compact knot of Peers and 'the King's friends;' at their head stands Lord Chancellor Thurlow, who is disparaging the Opposition. 'Mind not the nonsensical biddings of those common fellows.' The 'chosen representatives' of the people [] standing by themselves, apart from the bidders; their backs are turned upon the entire proceedings, and they are apparently leaving the sale-room en masse, by way of protest, at the same time exclaiming, 'Adieu to Liberty!' 'Despair not!' and 'Now or never!' Fox alone is making a resolute stand; he cries, 'I am determined to bid with spirit for lot 1—he shall pay dear for it that outbids me.' The lots are of general interest. Lot [] is Magna Charta; lot 3 is 'Obsolete Public Acts;' lot 4, the Sword of Justice; lot 5, the Mace; lots 6 and 7, legal wigs and gowns, &c. The sale-clerk, recording the biddings on 'the parchments of 'sundry Acts,' is declaring gleefully, 'We shall get the supplies by this sale!'

March 29, 1784. The Drum-Major of Sedition.—The portrait of Major John Cartright, [] of the [] energetic and disinterested Reformers, is given under this title. The Major is firmly grasping a pole of Liberty in his right hand, and is holding forth in front of the hustings erected for the election, round which are gathered [] voters and [] crowd of others, who are being addressed from the platform. Admiral Lord Hood is introduced, shouting, 'Two faces under a Hood!' The speech made by the Drum-Major of Sedition has [] strong ironical tendency. 'All gentlemen and other electors for Westminster who [] ready and willing [] surrender their rights and those of their fellow-citizens [] secret influence, and the Lords of the Bedchamber, let them repair to the prerogative standard, lately erected [] the Cannon Coffee House, where they shall be kindly received—until their services [] no longer wanted. This, gentlemen, is the last time of asking, [] we are determined to abolish the power of the House of Commons, and in future be governed by Prerogative, as they are in France and Turkey. Gentlemen, the ambition of the enemy is now evident

Has he not, within these few days past, stole the Great Seal of England, while the Chancellor¹ ■■■ taking ■ bottle with ■ female favourite, ■ all great men do? I am informed, gentlemen, that the enemy ■■■■■■ Regal Authority, and, by virtue of the Great Seal (which he stole), is creating of peers and granting of pensions. A most shameful abuse, gentlemen, of that instrument. If you assist ■ to pull down the House of Commons, every person who hears me has ■ chance of becoming a great man, if he is happy enough ■ hit the fancy of Lord Bute and of Mr. Jenkinson. Huzza! God save the King!

March 30, 1784. Sir Cecil's Budget for Paying the National Debt.—Sir Cecil Wray, in spite of his Ministerial friends, does not seem ■ have been ■ popular candidate after he had deserted the Liberal party; indeed, he became the ■■■ puppet of the hour, the Ministerial struggles of the 'King's friends' being not so much directed ■ bringing in their nominee, as to inflict the mortification of ■ defeat on Fox. Two unfortunate projects, which Sir Cecil Wray had originated, were perpetually used against him by his opponents; these ■■■ his proposals to abolish Chelsea Hospital and to tax maid-servants. In the print 'Sir Cecil's Budget for paying the National Debt' has been accepted, and Chelsea Hospital is brought to the ground, involving in its destruction all the disabled veterans for whom the country ■■■ bound ■ provide. Sir Cecil is shown in the distance, exposed to very humiliating ■■■■■■; ■ pensioner, who has escaped the downfall of the Hospital, is whipping him forward with his crutch, while ■ group of female servants, with pails and brooms, are visiting on his person, the injustices they anticipated. 'Tax servant-maids, you brute, and starve poor old soldiers—a fine Member of Parliament!' While in office Fox had proposed ■ tax upon receipts, which ■■■ loudly cried down by his Tory opponents; it ■■■ now written of Wray:—

For though he opposes the stamping of notes,
Tis in order to tax all your petticoats;
Then how can ■ woman solicit your votes
For Sir Cecil Wray?

For had he to women been ■■■ a friend,
Nor by taxing them tried ■■■ old taxes to mend,
Yet so stingy he is, that ■■■ can contend
For Sir Cecil Wray.

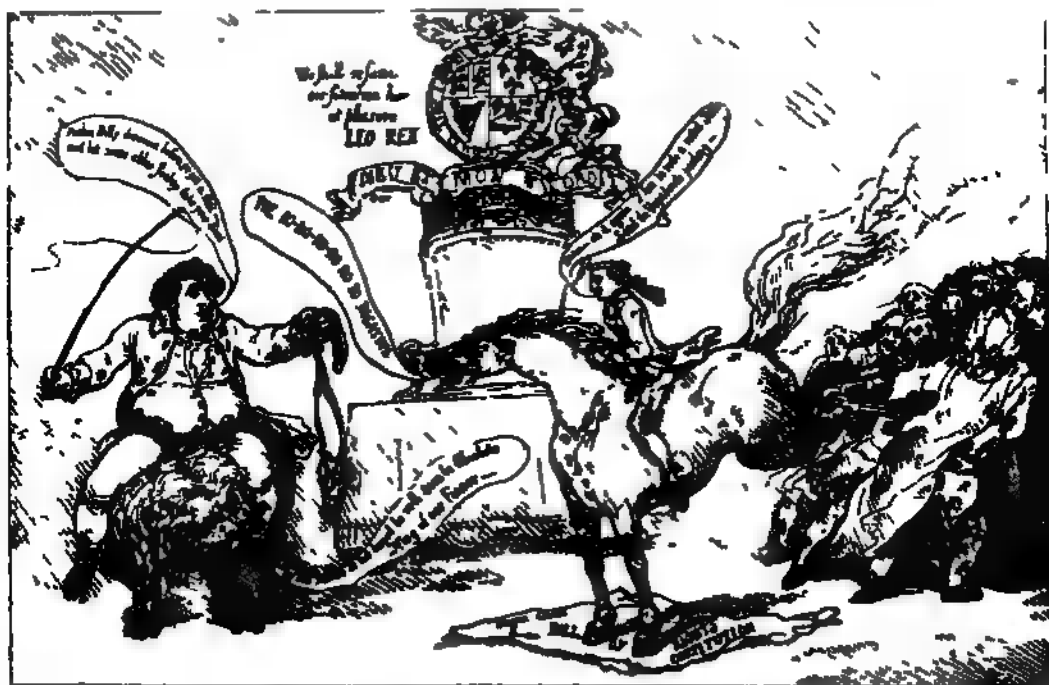

The gallant Lord Hood to ■■■ country is dear;
His voters, like Charlie's, make excellent cheer;
But who has been able to taste the small beer
Of Sir Cecil Wray?

¹ Lord Thurlow, whose private life, if ■■■ believe the caricaturists, ■■■ of the purest.

Then come, ev'ry free, ev'ry generous soul,
That loves a fine girl and a full flowing bowl,
Come here in a body, and all of you poll
'Gainst Sir Cecil Wray!

In vain all the arts of the Court — let loose,
The electors of Westminster — will choose
To run down a Fox, and set up a goose Like Sir Cecil Wray.

March 31, 1784. The Hanoverian Horse and the British Lion. A ———
■ new play, lately acted in Westminster with distinguished applause. Act ii.,

■ HANOVERIAN HORSE ■ BRITISH LION.

scene last.—The faithful Commons are still suffering from the aggressive tendencies of the White Horse of Hanover, which is trampling on 'Magna Charta,' 'Bill of Rights,' and 'Constitution,' kicking, rearing, and driving the members of the 'faithful Commons' forth with his heels. The brute is neighing out 'Pre-ro-ro-ro-ro-ro-gative;' while Pitt, a remarkably light jockey, is encouraging the excitement of the brute: 'Bravo! go it again; I love to ride a mettle steed. Send the vagabonds packing.' The sturdy person of Fox is safely astride the British Lion; the royal beast has quitted his place in the army of England, leaving the notice, 'We shall ——— our situation here at pleasure.—Leo Rex.' He ■ keeping ■ watchful eye ■ the Hanoverian Horse, and protesting, 'If this horse is ■■ tamed he will ■■■ be absolute king of ■■ forest.' Fox has come on the ■■■■ prepared ■■ render efficient assistance ; he ■■ provided with a bit and bridle, and ■■ stout riding-whip, ■■ ■■■■ and control the high-mettled Hanoverian steed. 'Prithee, Billy,' he is crying to Pitt, 'dismount before ye get a fall—and let ■■■ abler jockey take your seat !'

April 3, 1784. The Two Patriotic Duchesses ■■ their Canvass ; requesting the favour of ■■ early poll.—The zealous ■■■■■■ for 'the Champion of the people' ■■ enlisting the sympathies of possible voters. Their mode of procedure is shown at a butcher's stall, according to the satirist's view of their patriotic exertions. The Duchess of Devonshire, wearing the Prince of Wales's plume in her hat, above ■■ immense favour for Fox, has placed one arm round the waist of ■■ young butcher, and, with her left hand, is pushing a well-filled purse into his pocket ; ■■ the ■■■■ time she is cementing the compact with a chaste kiss. Farther on is ■■■ the Duchess of Portland, who ■■ attempting ■■ beguile another butcher's apprentice ; but she is less successful, probably because her personal attractions will not bear comparison with the graces of the winning Georgiana.

April 4, 1784. The Incurable.—Fox, in ■■ strait-jacket, with ■■■■ disposed in his hair, is represented as mad beyond recovery ; he is singing in forlorn despair :—

My lodging is ■■ the cold ground, and very hard is my case,
But that which grieves me ■■■ ■■ the losing of my place.

Doctor Munro, the King's physician, in his court-dress, is examining the patient through his eyeglass, and attesting, 'As I have not the least hope of his recovery, let him be removed amongst the Incurables.' Below the print the following lines ■■■■ :—

Dazzled with hope he could not ■■ the cheat
Of aiming with impatience to be great.
With wild ambition in his heart, we find,
Farewell content and quiet of his mind ;
For glittering clouds he left the solid shore,
And wonted happiness returns no more.

The poll ■■■ opened on April 1, and continued without intermission until May 17.

April 8, 1784. The Rival Candidates.—The three candidates who ■■■■ contesting the 'great fight' for the representation of Westminster ■■ represented according to their supposititious characteristics. Fox, with his hand on his heart, and his arm held out in ■■ declamatory attitude, stands for Demosthenes ; Hood ■■ introduced as Themistocles ; and Wray is less flatteringly served up in the character of Judas Iscariot. It ■■■■ be remembered that 'the Knight of ■■ Back-stairs' had been nominated for the previous Parliament by Fox, with whom he had shared the representation of Westminster, but Wray thought fit ■ desert ■ the Tories and oppose his political leader, forsaking his friends and his principles for the sake of promised Ministerial patronage.

April 10, 1784. The Parody, or Mother Cole and Loader. (See Foote's 'Minor,' page 29.)—The broad-spread figure of Lord North, with ■ capacious hood round his head, is parodied as the sanctimonious Mother Cole; ■ bottle of 'Constitution Cordial,' to sustain her sinking spirits, is placed by her side. Fox, ■ Loader, with his dicebox thrown to the ground, is listening, handkerchief in hand, to Old Moll's lamentations. 'Ay, I ■ going, a-wasting, and a-wasting. What will become of the House when I ■ gone Heaven knows. No, when people are missed, then they are mourned. Sixteen years have I lived in St. Stephen's Chapel comfortably and creditably; and, tho' I say it, could have got bail any hour of the day! No knock-me-down doings in my House—a set of regular, sedate, sober customers—no rioters. Sixteen did I say? Ay, eighteen years have I paid Scot and Lot, and during the whole time nobody has said, "Mrs. North, why do you say so?"—unless twice that I ■ threatened with impeachment, and three times with ■ halter!' Fox is moved to respond, 'May and privileges, is dedicated by ■ grateful Elector. N.B. Beware of counterfeits, ■ the Greenwich and Chelsea Watchmen are upon the look-out !

RIVAL CANDIDATES.

April 12, 1784. The Poll.—The ■■■ is still the polling-booth, Covent Garden | the canvassers, committees, and mobs ■ giving their entire attention ■ the performance carried on for their entertainment between the fair rival advocates, who ■ balanced ■ either end of ■ plank laid ■■■ a ■■■ post. The Duchess of Devonshire is sent up into the air ; her end of the poll is carried over Fox's head ; 'Duke and ■ Duke, a play,' is placarded above her.

The opposite extreme of the poll is weighed down effectually by the weight of ■ corpulent lady, described in these election squibs ■ Madame Blubber, the

■ WESTMINSTER WATCHMAN.

Honourable Mrs. Hobart (Lady Buckinghamshire), of Pic-Nic notoriety. Hood is cheating by kneeling down and clinging to the skirts of the Ministerial championess, he lends ■ additional weight to his side of the balance ; behind them is Wray, defying his opponent. Over the heads of this group flutters a placard, 'The Rival Candidates, a farce.'

The Opposition party dwelt mainly upon Sir Cecil Wray's renegade ■■■ of principle in turning against his leader, Fox. His liberality ■■■ severely called in question, and there ■■■ ■ satirical story of his keeping nothing in his cellar but small beer. The old symbolism of slavery and France—wooden shoes—was revived for the occasion ; much stress was laid ■ the extensive polling of soldiers for Hood and Wray at the beginning of the election, when on ■ occasion two hundred and eighty of the Guards were ■ in a body to give their votes as householders. This, Horace Walpole observes, ■ legal, 'but which my father (Sir Robert) in the most quiet sessions would not have dared to do.' All dependents on the Court ■ commanded to vote ■ the ■ side ■ the soldiers. The following placard, which was put out early in the canvass, is a fair example of the courtesies with which the Ministerial manoeuvres were ■ knowledge by their opponents :—

'All Horse Guards, Grenadier Guards, Foot Guards, and Black Guards that have not polled for the destruction of Chelsea Hospital and the tax ■ maid-servants are desired to meet at the Gutter Hole, opposite the Horse Guards, where they will have a full bumper of knock-me-down and plenty of soapsuds, before they go to the poll for Sir Cecil Wray or eat.

■■■■ OF THE BEDCHAMBER.

'N.B. Those that have ■ shoes ■ stockings may ■ without, there being ■ quantity of wooden shoes provided for them.'

April 14, 1784. Lords of the Bedchamber.—The Duchess of Devonshire, in her morning gown and cap, is favouring two privileged visitors with a cup of tea in her boudoir.

The Duchess is attending ■ the tea urn ; above her head hangs the Reynolds portrait of her liege lord. Sam House, in his publican's jacket, is seated, stirring ■ cup of tea, on the sofa beside Fox, who is familiarly patting his friend and indefatigable ally on his bald head by way of friendly encouragement.

Sam House ■ one of the most popular figures of his day, and he ■ into especial prominence, ■ ■ have seen, during the Fox's ■ He is said to have kept open house during the Westminster Election ■ his own expense, and ■ honoured by entertaining the great Whig nobility. He ■ indefatigable supporter of Fox, and his assistance was, ■ may be supposed, of no trifling moment to the cause.

See brave Sammy House, he's as still ■ ■ mouse,
And does ■ with prudence ■ clever ;
See what shoals with him flock to poll for brave Fox ;
Give thanks to Sam House, boys, for ever, for ever, for ever !
Give thanks to Sam House, boys, for ever !

Brave bald-headed Sam, all must own, is the man
Who does canvass for brave Fox so clever ;
His aversion, I say, is to small beer and Wray !
May his bald head be honour'd for ever, for ever, for ever !
May his bald head be honour'd for ever !

April 20, 1784. The Covent Garden Nightmare.—This subject is ■ parody ■ a painting by Fuseli. Rowlandson has taken the idea and fitted it to the purpose of ■ electioneering squib. Fox is represented stretched in ■ uneasy slumber, nightmare-ridden. An unearthly incubus oppresses his body and haunts his repose ; a corpulent imp is crouched on his hams pressing the great man's chest, while the head and shoulders of ■ supernatural mare ■ shown making their appearance through the bed-curtains. On a table by Fox's side ■ shown the dice and dicebox, the satirist's inevitable ■ when dealing with the frailties of the 'man of the people,' who, it must be confessed, had in his day committed sufficient ■ in the way of gambling ; a vice he absolutely renounced in after-life, but not before it had ruined his purse, imperilled his reputation, and proved ■ fruitful ■ of recrimination in the mouths of his enemies.

April 22, 1784. Madame Blubber ■ her Canvass.—We find the Duchess of Devonshire and the Honourable Mrs. Hobart—the most prominent of the fair electioneering agents who threw the power of their personal charms into the political arena—scandalised alternately ; her Grace the fascinating Georgiana ■ represented ■ a softening influence by which the votes of the butchers ■ secured ; we find Pitt's fair champion, Madame Blubber (Lady Buckinghamshire), endeavouring ■ cajole the ■ classes in identical fashion. The lady, who, it be acknowledged, somewhat stout, is trying her hand amongst the rough sellers of meat; she is holding a purse a bait, saying, 'Hood and Wray, my dear butcher;' the butcher's dogs regarding the canvasser suspiciously; their master, ease in his armchair, without moving his pipe from his mouth, is puffing out bluntly, 'I'm engaged to the Duchess!' 'Pho! give her a glass,' suggests the butcher's friend, who is drinking punch with him from a bowl which is the figure of a fox, the chopping-block serving their table. Madame Blubber has a train of appreciative butcher's men in her wake; is declaring that she is 'the fattest cattle he ever handled!' a drover is observing, 'Lincolnshire, dammee!' and a lad with a tray pronounces her a 'plumper!'

THE COURT CANVASS OF MADAME BLUBBER.

To the Tune of 'The First Time at the Looking-glass.'

A certain lady I won't
Must take an active part, sir,
To show that DEVON'S beauteous dame
Should not engage each heart, sir.
She canvass'd all, both great and small,
And thunder'd at each door, sir;
She rummaged every shop and stall—
The Duchess was still before her.

Sam Marrowbones had shut up shop,
And just had lit his pipe, sir,
When in the lady needs must pop,
Exceeding plump and ripe, sir.
'Good zounds,' says he, 'how late you be!
For votes you come to bore me;
But let us feel your beef or veal—
The Duchess has been before you.'

A fishmonger she next address'd
With many a soothing tale, sir,
And for his vote most warmly press'd,
But all would not prevail, sir.
'The finest cod's-head in town,
Of oysters send two too.'
'Extremely, madame, like your own—
The Duchess has been before you.'

A grocer next, to make amends,
The dame with smiles accosted:
'You grocers all to PITT are friends,
Of her connection boasted!

'For plums and raisins, ma'am,' said he,
'I'm willing for to serve you:
In politics I shan't agree—
The Duchess here before you.'

Sly Obadiah at prayers
With many pious folk, sir;
His pretty maid on the back-stairs
She found, and thus bespoke her:
'This riband take, all interest make;
Your master will adore you,
For Hood and Wray pray kiss and pray.'
'Now, Duchess, I'm before you.'

A stable-keeper to engage
She then her talents tried, sir;
He into a monstrous rage,
And all her smiles defied, sir.
'Are you a full moon Court balloon?
Get out, you female Tory;
Tho' Courts prevail I'll not turn tail—
The Duchess here before you.'

However courtiers take offence,
And cits and prudes may join, sir,
Beauty will influence
The free and generous mind, sir.
Fair DEVON, like the rising sun,
Proceeds in her full glory,
Whilst madame's duller orb must
The Duchess moves before her.

April 22, 1784. Wit's Last Stake, the Cobbling Voter and Abject Canvassers.
-Every stratagem which could secure the popular voice for either candidate was freely put in practice; but while the Pittites resorted to threats and force, Fox and his adherents relied mainly on persuasion and good humour. Wit's last Stake shows the exertions made in the canvassing department. Fox is in the [] of the picture, giving his knee [] seat for his fair advocate, the Duchess of Devonshire, who is resorting to a subterfuge commonly employed [] precaution against actions for bribery at elections, by the stall of [] cobbler, who happens [] be [] voter: her Grace has discovered that her shoe requires a stitch; the cobbler, with his tongue thrust [] at the side of his mouth, is working [] the supposititious repairs with pantomimic energy; meanwhile his wife is receiving in payment for the job [] handful of sovereigns from her Grace's purse. The [] takes place in Peter Street, and the cobbler's board announces, 'Shoes made and mended by Bob Stichett, cobbler to her Grace the tramping Duchess.' A fox's brush is being waved overhead out of the first-floor window by a supporter, who has been provided with pipe and pot [] the Whig expense. Fox is giving his right hand [] another voter, [] tattered and stupified-looking scavenger, to whom Sam House is also administering comfort in the shape of a pot of porter. Among other followers of the 'Man of the People' Rowlandson has introduced [] chimney-sweeper and his boy.

WIT'S LAST STAKE, [] THE COBBLING VOTER AND ABJECT CANVASSERS.

Fox's [redacted] [redacted] enlivened by the rough humours of the various classes whose favour he required to enlist; his [redacted] good-nature [redacted] equal to every emergency. One blunt tradesman, whose vote he solicited, replied, 'Mr. Fox, I cannot give you my support; I admire your abilities, but d— your principles!' To which the candidate smartly responded, 'My friend, I applaud you for your sincerity, but d— your manners!'

In another instance Fox's application to a saddler in the Haymarket for his interest was met with a practical joke—the man produced a halter, with which he expressed his willingness to oblige the statesman. Said Fox, 'I return you thanks, my friend, for your intended present; but I should be sorry to deprive you of it, [redacted] I presume it must be [redacted] family piece.'

April 22, 1784. King's Place, or a View of Monsieur Reynard's Best Friends.—Another gathering of Fox's fair adherents. The Prince of Wales, surrounded by fashionably-dressed nymphs, wearing one of Fox's favours below his plume, and with [redacted] fox-brush in his hand, is speaking in his friend's favour: 'He supported my cause!' A pleasingly-drawn female—probably intended to suggest Mrs. Robinson, the Perdita of the Prince's early love-story—is asserting, 'He is as generous [redacted] a prince, and a prince should not be limited!' A group of Lady Abbesses [redacted] also saying 'good things' in their candidate's favour: 'He introduced his Royal Highness to my house!' 'I have taken many [redacted] pound of his money. Fox for ever. Huzza!'

April 22, 1784. Political Affection.—The Duchess of Devonshire is still slandered by the satirists; according [redacted] the present unjust version her 'political affection' is causing her to neglect her infant, the heir of the Cavendishes, to lavish her tenderness on a hybrid prodigy, a fox dressed up in the robes of an infant. By the side of a neglected cradle is [redacted] [redacted] cat, forgetting her kitten to lick the face of a poodle.

This [redacted] hostility to the Duchess [redacted] probably popular in its day, [redacted] we find a long series of allusions conceived in the same spirit.

April 23, 1784. Reynard put to his Shifts.—The artists always took care to draw the Duchess of Devonshire as handsome and graceful as possible, [redacted] when their satires were most reckless and unsparing; while they descended [redacted] outrage the lady's fair reputation by innuendoes which were utterly unwarrantable. The beautiful Devon is standing in the middle of the picture, filled, [redacted] usual, with animation for the Whig cause; she is offering the shelter of her protection to [redacted] panting and frightened fox, whose pursuers [redacted] following fast on his brush. A huntsman is encouraging his hounds: 'Tally O! my good dogs!' 'No Coalition,' 'No India Bill,' and other party utterances [redacted] put into the mouths of the pack.

April 29, 1784. The Case is Altered.—The election has gone against Sir Cecil Wray, and he has [redacted] turn elsewhere; Fox, it will be remembered, in addition to his return for Westminster, was elected for Kirkwall (Scotland), and in the print he is shown driving his discomfited opponent to Lincoln.

The Ministerial candidate is not travelling with a flourish of trumpets, but ■ smuggled off in the 'Lincolnshire ■■■■■ for paupers,' the knight is reflecting ■■■■ his reverses: 'I always ■■■■ a poor dog, but ■■■■ I am ■■■■ than ever.' Fox is acting as charioteer; he is saying, over his shoulder, 'I will drive you to Lincoln, where you may superintend the small beer and brickdust.'

Lord Hood, who has ■■■■ upon this conveyance suddenly, is moved with pity for his late colleague; he cries, 'Alas! poor Wray.'

■ CASE IS ALIENED

As the increasing number of votes gave fresh spirit to the Foxites, satirical squibs, and songs exulting ■■■■ Wray's possible downfall and his future fate, were plentifully put forth by the wits of the Opposition. The following specimen will illustrate the nature of ■■■■ of the placards which ■■■■ scattered about towards the close of the election:—

Oh! help Judas, lest he fall into the PIT of ingratitude!!!

The prayers of all bad Christians, Heathens, Infidels, and Devil's agents are most earnestly requested for their dear friend, JUDAS ISCAHOT, Knight of the Back-stairs,

Lying ■ the period of political dissolution, having received ■ dreadful wound from ■ lovers of liberty and the Constitution, ■ the poll of ■ last ■ days at ■ Hastings, nigh ■ ■ Place of Cabbages.

April 29, 1784. Madame Blubber's Last Shift, ■ the Ærostatic Dilly.—

This caricature pictures the hustings at Covent Garden, with a distant view of Richmond Hill. Madame Blubber has patriotically contrived to convert herself into an air-balloon, for the collection and conveyance of outlying voters, crying, 'This may save him,' ■ allusion to some incident in the ■■■■■. A brace of voters have been secured in the parachute of this novel Ærostatic Dilly; these favoured gentlemen ■■ enabled to take a flying view from their elevation of the hustings below. Wray and Hood are anxiously looking forward to the arrival of their balloon. According to the inscription given on the plate, in the artist's hand, the print represents 'The grand political Balloon, launched at Richmond Park, ■ the — March, 1784, and discharged by secret influence with great effect in Covent Garden ■ 12 o'clock ■ the same day.

'As it may be necessary ■ explain to the public upon what principles a body ■■ conveyed twelve miles with so great velocity, it must be understood that the lady, though ponderous, being of a volatile disposition, out of decency sewed up her petticoats, which, being filled with gas, immediately raised her to a considerable height in the atmosphere, and, by the attraction of secret influence, ■■ conveyed to her desired object—the support of Hood and Wray and the Constitution—and descended happily to the hustings with two outlying and dependent voters.'

Tho' in every street	Eight trips in this way,
All the voters you meet	For Hood and for Wray,
The Duchess knows best how to court them,	I'll make poll sixteen in ■■ day.
Yet for outlying votes,	Dear Wray, don't despair,
In my petticoats,	My supplies by the air
I've found out a way ■ transport them!	Shall ■■■■■ losses ■ Monday!

*April 30, 1784. Procession to the Hustings after ■ Successful Canvass. (No. 14.)—*Fox's supporters, ■ body of highly respectable householders, wearing huge Fox favours in their hats, ■■ walking in procession to the hustings, cheered by the mob, and preceded by a marrowbone-and-cleaver accompaniment. At the head of the train marches the famous Duchess, with a somewhat novel standard; the other fair canvassers, whose portraits ■■■■ in the previous prints, are following in the footsteps of their illustrious leader; ■■ is carrying ■ placard, 'Fox and the Rights of the Commons;' another has a mob-cap and ■ apron, borne fluttering ■ ■ pole, with the words, 'No tax on Maid-servants.' Behind follows ■ ■■■■■ key—the key of the back-stairs—carried ■ deride the defeated candidate and the Court influence which had vainly been brought into play for his support.

May 1, 1784. Every Man has his Hobby-horse.—The successful candidate ■ chaired in a novel and agreeable fashion; his noble supporter, the Duchess of Devonshire, has taken him 'pick-a-back,' and, with staff and scrip, is bearing the victor ■ his triumphant progress; she is pausing at the door of Mungo's Hotel, dealer in British spirits, and soliciting the hospitality of the proprietor, ■ black ■ 'For the good of the Constitution, give me ■ glass of gin!'

Various bacchanalian revels ■ proceeding around, ■ the strength of Fox's triumphant return; the mob ■ huzzaing around two monster standards, which ■ topped by the cap of Liberty, and inscribed, 'Rights of the Commons. No prerogative, 'Fox and Liberty all over the world.' An ensign is introduced, ■ appropriate ■ the occasion, significantly figuring forth a pair of executioner's axes, bound with ■ wreath of laurel.

TO THE HUBBINGS AFTER ■ SUCCESSFUL CANTASS.

May 6, 1784. Wisdom Led by Virtue and Prudence to the Temple of Fame.—This print is ascribed to Rowlandson, and in various points it offers a close resemblance to his style of execution. Wisdom in the present case is personified by the successful candidate for Westminster; the Duchess of Devonshire and Lady Duncannon, wearing Fox cockades in their head-dresses, ■ represented as Virtue and Prudence. The former lady is also carrying a fox's brush; she is crying:—

Let Envy rail and Disappointment rage,
Still Fox shall prove the wonder of the age!

To which Lady Duncannon is adding :—

Triumph and Fame shall every step attend
His king's best subject and his country's friend!

Britannia is seated, in ■■■ attitude of expectation, ■■■ the portal of the Temple of Fame; she is bidding her patriotic ■■■ 'welcome to her arms.' Sir Cecil Wray, represented ■■■ ■■ disappointed Fury, is ■■■ in the distance; he is soliloquising :—

Now, by the ground that ■ am banish'd from,
Well could ■ curse away ■ winter's night.

May 11, 1784. A Coat of Arms. Dedicated to the Newly-created Earl of Lonsdale.—There is ■ publisher's name to the plate, which offers a fanciful and by no means flattering design for an appropriate coat of arms and supporters, gratuitously presented for the use of Sir James Lowther, the newly-created Earl of Lonsdale. Two ragged and semi-clad Volunteers, the one minus his culottes, the other without shoes, with the initials W.M. on their crossbelts, form the supporters of a shield, above which figures the earl's coronet. There are six quarterings, each filled in with paper scrolls: 'False Musters,' 'False Certificates for Volunteer Companies,' 'False Returns,' 'Retention of Clothing,' 'Contract for building a man-of-war (cancelled and money returned),' and 'Retention of Bounty.' The motto of this suggestive escutcheon is, 'Who doubts it ' "

Pitt had obtained his first seat in Parliament (1781) through the influence of Sir James Lowther, described by 'Junius' as 'the contemptuous tyrant of the North.' In 1784, when the King and his Prime Minister deemed it prudent to reward the adherents of their party, and at the same time strengthen the Court influence, by creating ■■■ batch of peers, Pitt repaid his obligation to Lowther (the Duke of Rutland, Pitt's fellow-student at Cambridge, had enlisted Lowther's influence in his favour), by raising him to the House of Peers, under the title of the Earl of Lonsdale, thus overleaping the two inferior stages of the peerage. It might be supposed that this reward would have been commensurate with his pretensions, but Earl Lonsdale's name appearing at the bottom of the list of the newly-created earls published in the Gazette, he threatened to reject the earldom, and means ■■■ with difficulty found ■■ appease his irritation.

The wits of the 'Rolliad' made the ■■■ of the circumstance: 'Hints from Dr. Prettyman to the Premier's Porter.—Let Lord Lonsdale have my Lord and your Lordship repeated in his ear as often as possible; the apartment hung with garter blue is proper for his reception.'

My lords, my lords, ■ whisper ■ desire—
 Dame Liberty grows stronger—some feet higher ;
 She will not be bamboozled ■ of late—
Aristocrate et la Lanterne
 Are very often cheek by jowl, ■ learn,
 Within ■ certain neigh'b'ring bustling State :
 I think your lordships and your graces
 Would not much like to dangle with wry faces.

PETER PINDAR'S Ode to Lord Lonsdale.

May 11, 1784. The Westminster Mendicant.—The rejected candidate for Westminster has been sent forth a wanderer. The figure of Sir Cecil Wray is represented ■ a blind beggar ; he is resting his head and shoulders ■ a long staff ; under his left ■ is held ■ Subscription Scrutiny Box, in allusion to the vexatious scrutiny ■ ■ foot by his party ; and he holds a spaniel by a string ; ■ second begging-box is attached to the dog's collar. The mendicant is issuing ■ doleful appeal ■ the public :—

Pity the weak and needy, pray ;
 Oh ! pity me ; I've lost the day.

Above the head of the blind man's dog ■ the following :—

See here the dog, of ■ his kind
 The fittest for a beggar blind :
 The beast can bark, or growl ■ hog ;
 His ■ is Churchill,¹—oh, the dog !

Below the title is engraved :—

Ye Christians, charitab'le, good, and civil,
 Pray something give ■ this poor wandering devil.
 By ■ cast out, perhaps by God forgiven,
 Then may one Judas find ■ road to heaven.

The Irish chairmen—who had played such ■ conspicuous part in the early riots, where they routed the sailor-mob brought up by Hood to intimidate Fox's voters—had a fling at their discomfited enemy in ■ 'new' ballad, 'Paddy's Farewell to Sir Cecil' :—

Sir Cecil be aisy, I won't be unshivil ;
 Now the Man of the Papele is chose in your stead ;
 From ■ Covent Garden you're flung to the Divil ;
 By Jasus, Sir Cecil, you've bodder'd your head.
 Fa-ra-lal, &c.

¹ ■ several of the caricatures directed against Wray the discomfited candidate is invoking the assistance of Churchill, who ■ however, apparently unable ■ offer ■ patron any effectual aid.

To be sure, much avail to you all your fine spaiches ;
 'Tis nought but palaver, my honey, my dear ;
 While all Charlie's voters stick to him ■■■ laiches,
 A friend to ■■■ liberties and our small beer.
 Fa-ra-lal, &c.

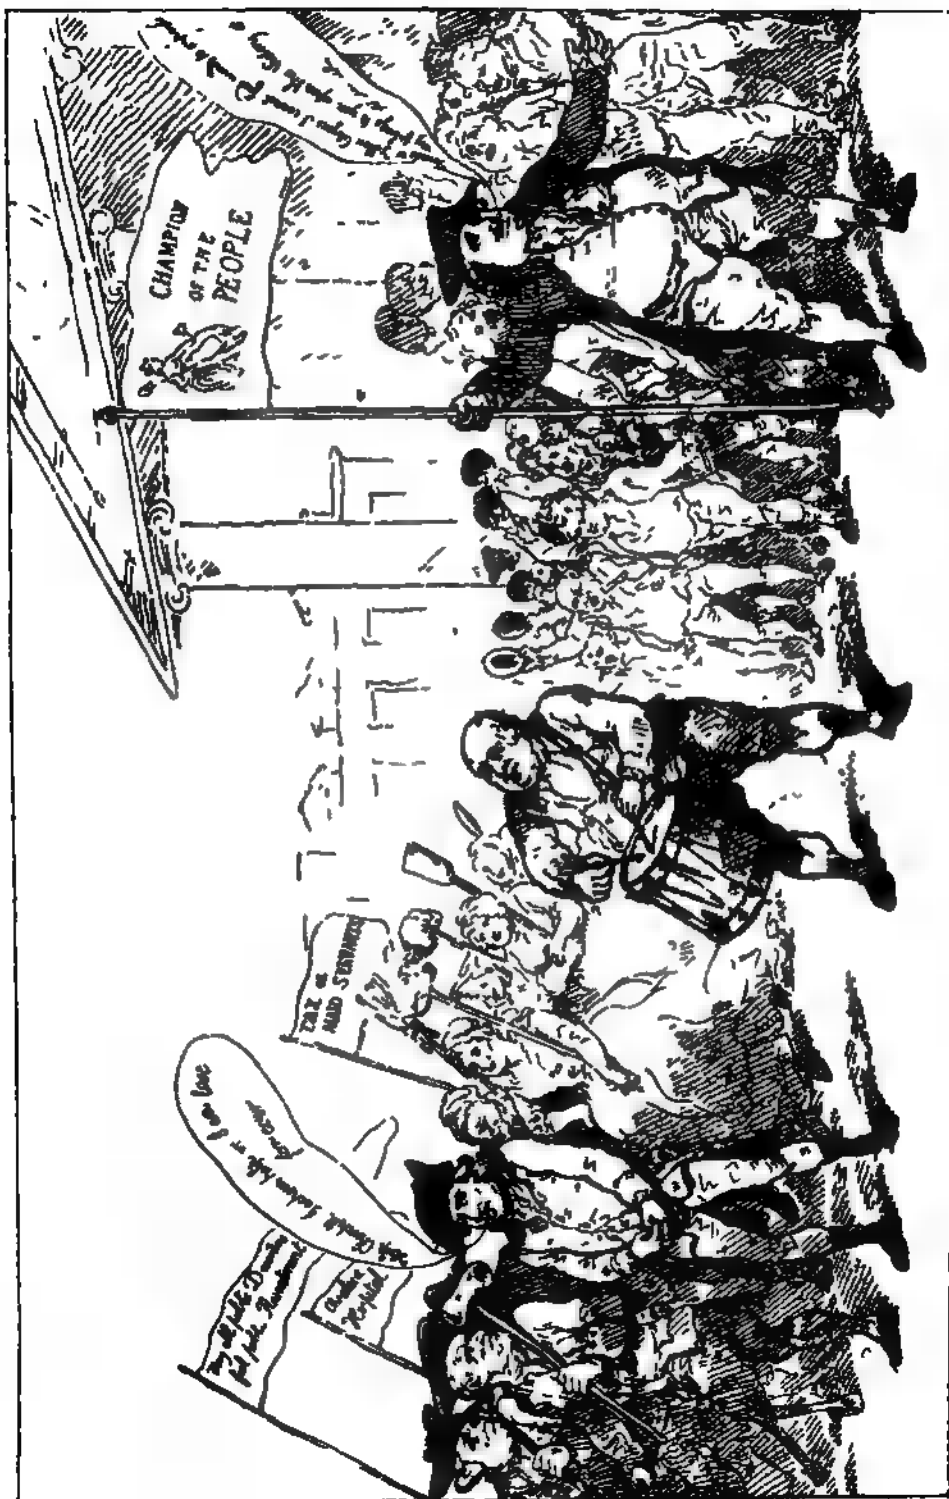

Ah, now ! pray let ■■ jontleman prissent take this ill ;
 By my truth, Pat shall nivir use unshivil werds ;
 But my varse sure ■■■■ praise, which the name of Sir Cecil Hands down to oblivion's latest records.
 Fa-ra-lal, &c.

If myshelf with the tongue of a prophet is gifted,
 Oh ! I ■■■ in a twinkling the knight's latter ind !
 Tow'rs the verge of his ■■■ div'lish high he'll be lifted,
 And after his death, never fear, he'll discind.
 Fa-ra-lal, &c.

May 18, 1784. The Westminster Deserter Drumm'd out of the Regiment.—This caricature brings the election ■■■ in Covent Garden ■■ ■■ end ; the Court party is defeated, and the Man of the People has triumphed. Sir Cecil Wray is handcuffed as ■ deserter, and is being drummed away from the hustings ; he is exclaiming, ' Help, Churchill ! Jackson, help ! or I ■■■ lost for ever ! ' It is worthy of record that Sir Cecil Wray's figure disappears from the caricatures until 1791, when ■■ meet him again, with ■ barrel of small-beer under his arm, assisting the members of the Opposition (whose ranks he rejoined) to carry out the 'hopes of the party,' ■■ set forth in ■ famous pictorial satire by Gillray (July 14, 1791).

In the Westminster Deserter 'honest Sam House' is drumming away with ■ will, and Wray is obliged to ■■ the gauntlet of a line of exasperated Chelsea Pensioners, who ■■ expressing a wish that 'all public deserters may feel public resentment ;' a body of maid-servants ■■ marching in the rear, with shovels, mops, and brooms, brought out in readiness to sweep forth their antagonist. The electioneering mob is divided between hooting the 'Deserter' and applauding the success of the 'Champion of the People,' who is planting the standard of Britannia and manfully acknowledging his gratitude to his supporters : ' Friends and fellow-citizens, I cannot find words to express my feelings to you upon this victory.'

Fox's difficulties, as regarded his seat for Westminster and the hostilities of his opponents, the Court party, did not end with the election ; the Ministerialists had from the first declared their intention of demanding a scrutiny if Fox ■■ cceeded, because it was known that, under the circumstances, this would be a long, tedious, and expensive affair. The returning officer acted partially, and upon Sir Cecil Wray's application for ■ scrutiny declined to make his return pending the investigation. Fox had secured ■■■■ for Kirkwall, ■■ that he ■■ not hindered from taking his place in the House; and after ■■■■ months' delay, and ■■ great deal of fighting on both sides, the High Bailiff, Thomas Corbett, was ordered to duly ■■■■ Charles James Fox as Member for Westminster, as is ■■ forth in a caricature by Rowlandson (see March 1, 1785). Fox subsequently thought proper to bring ■■ action against the High Bailiff, and that functionary in ■■■■ for his perfidy ■■ cast in heavy damages—a fresh triumph for the Opposition.

THE WESTMINSTER DRASKETER

May 18, 1784. Secret Influence Directing the New Parliament.—King George III. is complacently seated on his throne; ■■■■ ■■■■ reassured on the subject of his Parliament, he is remarking, with self-congratulation, 'I trust ■■ have got such ■■ Parliament as ■■ wanted.' Secret Influence is represented on ■■ side by a huge serpent whispering secret counsel ■■ the monarch. The head of the reptile is that of Lord Temple. Lord Thurlow, ■■ the other side of the throne, still wearing his Chancellor's wig, his body represented ■■ that of ■■ monstrous bird of prey, is observing, with his usual overbearing roughness, 'Damn the Commons! the Lords shall rule,' while the Scotch influence, in the person of Lord Bute, partially concealed behind the throne, is echoing, 'Very gude, very gude; damn the Commons!'

Britannia, unconscious of her danger, is calmly reposing, with her elbow resting on her shield, while Fox, who has recognised the dangers which are threatening the liberty of the people, is trying to rouse the slumberer, and crying, 'Thieves, thieves! Zounds, awake, madam, or you'll have your throat cut!'

May 18, 1784. Preceptor and Pupil.

Not Satan to the ear of Eve
Did e'er such pious counsel give.—MILTON.

The Prince of Wales, wearing his plumed hat, has fallen asleep; Fox, ■■■■ represented ■■ ■■ toad, with a fox's brush for ■■ tail—who has crept from the concealment of ■■■■ neighbouring sedges—is insinuating pernicious counsel into the ear of the slumberer—

Abjure thy country and thy parents, and ■■ will give thee dominion ■■■■
Many powers. Better to rule in ■■■■ than ■■■■ on earth.

May 18, 1784. The Departure.—This affecting ■■■■ is taking place outside the Prince of Wales's residence; his Royal Highness is watching the departure of his friend from the window. Fox is mounted on a patient ■■■■ ready ■■ ride the road ■■ 'Coventry;' the High Bailiff, having unlawfully refused ■■ make his return until the conclusion of the scrutiny which Sir Cecil Wray thought proper

■ instigate, the caricaturist hints that, for the time, the Whig leader will be 'left ■ in the cold' until the question of his return is finally settled. Fox has accordingly rolled up his India Bill, and is taking a doleful farewell of his fair champions, the Duchess of Devonshire and Lady Ducannon, on either side of his steed, the sorrowing ladies ■ grasping his hand and crying—

Farewell, my Charley!—let no fears assail
 Ah, sister, sister, must lie, then, depart!
 To lose poor Reynald almost breaks my heart

TITMLOW BUT GEORGE III WILLIAM BRITANNIA
 SECRET INFLUENCE DIRECTING THE NEW PARLIAMENT

Fox is observing, before his departure—

If that ■ Scrutiny at last takes place,
 I can't tell how 'twill be, and please your Grace!

Burke is standing, equipped as a postilion, in readiness ■ drive off his ally, with a plan of economy under his ■

May 25, 1784 Liberty and Fame Introducing Female Patriotism to Britannia

She smiles—
 Infused with a fortitude from heaven

SHAKESPEARE'S Tempest

This print has nothing of the caricature about it, excepting, perhaps, the unusual spirit, lightness, and ~~mode~~ of execution. All the figures are graceful and elegant, and the attitudes leave nothing to be desired. Britannia is ~~on~~ her throne, the British lion is ~~on~~ her feet, and the ocean, with her ships riding triumphant, is extending ~~as~~ far ~~as~~ can be seen; the figures of Liberty and Fame, with their respective attributes, are tripping up to the throne, leading the beautiful Georgiana forward to receive the laurels of victory.

May 20, 1784. For the Benefit of the Champion. A catch, to be performed at the New Theatre, Covent Garden. For admission apply to the Duchess. N.B. Gratis to those who wear large tails.

THE BENEFIT OF

The 'catch' is performed by the Duchess of Devonshire, Fox, and Lord North; the grief expressed by the singers is, of course, apocryphal. The Duchess is leading; she ~~wears~~ a Fox favour in her hat, which is further garnished with a fox's brush; she is pointing to a tombstone topped with the death's head and crossbones, and inscribed, 'Here lies poor Cecil Ray.' 'Look, neighbours, look! Here lies poor Cecil Wray.' 'Dead and turned to clay,' sings Fox; which Lord North adds, 'What! old Cecil Wray?' The sharp profile of Burke is thrust through the door. The pictures hanging round the room ~~are~~ appropriate ~~to~~ the subject: a committee of foxes are wondering ~~at~~ 'The Fox who has lost ~~his~~ tail;' 'The Fox and the Crow,' in which sly Reynard is represented as gazing longingly ■ the cheese held in the crow's beak ; ' Fox and the Grapes,' and ' Fox and Goose.'

May 28, 1784. The Petitioning Candidate for Westminster.—Designed according ■ ■ note on the plate, by Lord James Manners, and executed by Rowlandson. As ■■ stated in ■■ earlier caricature, due precautions ■■■■ ■■ employed that Fox should not be left without ■ place in the newly-constituted Parliament, and accordingly in the present print—nearly the last of the series put forth ■■ the Westminster Election for 1784—Fox, with a fox's head and brush, completely dressed in a suit of tartan, is speeding along, on a Highland pony, away from Kirkwall (for which he took his seat) back to London, flourishing his plaid, and crying, ' From the heath-covered mountains of Scotia I come.'

We ■■ now take leave of the caricatures called forth ■■ the Westminster Election and continue our review of the remainder of the satirical prints issued by Rowlandson in the course of 1784.

November 2, 1784. The Minister's Ass. Vide Gazetteer, November 11, 1784. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.—Three mounted figures are shown crossing Wimbledon Common ; ■■ gentleman's donkey is speeding along briskly ; a gallant lady, mounted ■■ ■ grey horse, is riding between the two cavaliers and their donkeys ; she is giving ■ friendly cut with her whip ■■ the animal bestriden by her left-hand neighbour—the minister's ass, in fact, which is refusing ■■ gallop forward ; the rider is wearing his blue riband. A figure in the rear is endeavouring to reduce the refractory beast to ■■■■ with a scientifically administered kick.

December 10, 1784. Anticipation of an intended Exhibition, with ■■ excellent new ballad to be sung by ■ High Character, to the tune of ' The Vicar and Moses.' Mark Lane, delin. and fecit. Published by T. Harris, High Street, Marylebone.—This caricature sets forth by anticipation the fate of Christopher Atkinson, M. P., who ■■ sentenced ■■ November 27, 1784, and pilloried November 25, 1785. A print by Gillray (August 12, 1782) gives a view of the trial under the title of ' The Victualling Committee Framing ■ Report.' Peter Pindar also makes a poetical allusion to the circumstances. Christopher Atkinson, M.P. for Heydon, Yorkshire, ■■ convicted of peculation in his semi-official capacity as corn-factor to the Victualling Board. He was finally tried at the King's Bench for perjury, found guilty, and expelled from the House of Commons.

In Rowlandson's view of the novel situation of the contractor the pillory is raised ■■ the Corn Exchange, and the criminal is standing with his head and hands enclosed in ■ board, with two dwarf corn-sheaves on either side ; the Sheriffs, with ■ numerous crowd of citizens, ■■ attending the exhibition, which Atkinson does not find to his taste. The sentiments of the pilloried contractor ■■ expounded in ■ ballad :—

Here stand I, poor soul,
 With my head in ■ hole,
 To be gazed at by all passers by;
 And what's this about,
 This racket and rout,
 But for swearing a mercantile lie!

They say that for gain
 I've a rogue been in grain
 But what is all that to the point?
 If all were so serv'd
 Who, like me, have deserv'd,
 The State would be soon out of joint.

Many agents, ■ fear,
 Would have their heads here,
 And, like me, be expos'd to detractors;
 What would you do then,
 For Parliament men,
 Should any of them be contractors?

For my part I rejoice,
 And with loud, grateful voice
 Proclaim it to all my beholders;
 Notwithstanding your scoff,
 I think I'm well off,
 That my head is ■ ■ on my shoulders,

■ know it ■ well,
 And for once truth will tell,
 Tho' my speech in this d—d place may falter:
 Not ■ session goes by
 But much less rogues than I
 Their last contract make with ■ halter.

But as I am quitting
 I think it is fitting
 My future pursuits you should know:
 When I leave the King's Bench
 I will live with the French;
 To the devil my country may go.

1784. John Stockdale, the Bookselling Blacksmith, ■ of the King's New Friends. (See Intrepid Magazine.)—Old Stockdale, the somewhat notorious publisher of his day, who, like the hero of the last picture, had the honour of standing in the pillory, is shown at his forge, surrounded by hammers and horseshoes, and with a tethered jackass waiting his attentions, as soon ■ the Bookselling Blacksmith shall have completed the work he has in hand, the somewhat incongruous occupation of hammering out folio volumes ■ ■ anvil.

SOCIAL CARICATURES.

January 24, 1784. A Sketch from Nature. Published by J. R. Smith, 83 Oxford Street.—This plate is apparently scarce, since the only impression the writer has seen is one in the French National Collection of Engravings, Paris, where the admirer of Rowlandson's works will be gratified to discover a very fair gathering of caricatures by this master, the collection containing certain scarce subjects which it is difficult to find elsewhere, besides several proofs of ■■■ plates. The prints throughout ■■■ in capital preservation; in several instances ■■■ impression from ■■■ plate, and ■■■ coloured print from the same, ■■■ mounted side by side.

A Sketch from Nature, which is the first and perhaps the best print of the Paris series, is rendered, like most of the plates published by J. R. Smith, exceptionally interesting from the ■■■ and delicacy bestowed on the engraving, and the ■■■ with which the tender expressions, which Rowlandson knew ■■■ well how to throw into the faces of his female beauties, are preserved and transferred to the copper. The subject is engraved in stipple, and, ■■■ a print after Rowlandson, it exhibits unusual quality and finish. The subject is somewhat hazardous: a situation borrowed from that inexhaustible epic the Rake's Progress, presenting all the license of debauchery, but expressed without coarseness. A mixed party of nymphs and roysterers ■■■ performing bacchanalian orgies; the 'Lady Abbess' has succumbed to her potations, and is slumbering heavily in her armchair. Punch and wine ■■■ flowing indiscriminately; ■■■ poodle has come in for the contents of ■■■ punch-glass, which is overturned, and a ■■■ in tipsy wantonness is upsetting ■■■ punch-bowl over the dog's head. The ■■■ of ■■■ sweetly pretty Bacchante are entwined round the neck of the maudlin reveller. Beside the well-filled table sits a youthful military 'blood'; another nymph, whose adolescent charms are liberally displayed, is seated on the knee of this son of Mars. The young lady is evidently disposed to be frolicsome, since she is flourishing in the air a full-bottomed wig, which she has snatched from the head of a corpulent Silenus, in whom age has failed to bring sober reason or to correct frivolity; this ancient buck is deservedly getting his face scratched and clawed in ■■■ struggle with ■■■ handsome maiden, dressed in a hat and feathers, who is forcibly repelling the advances of the elderly rake.

1784. English Curiosity, or the Foreigner Stared out of Countenance.—From this social caricature it ■■■ that ■■■ distinguished foreigner ■■■ visiting this country in 1784, whose general appearance was exciting ■■■ public attention than would be considered polite. The foreigner is dressed in a gay military uniform, and has gone to enjoy himself at the theatre; but the eyes of the audience do little else but stare at his uniform. The identity of this bird of passage is not very positive at this date. The plate, as a whole, is as characteristic and well-drawn an example of Rowlandson's etchings as can be found; the countenances of the spectators are capitally filled in, the various types of theatre goers are hit off with spirit, and the female faces and figures are rendered with remarkable sweetness.

COUNSELLOR AND CLIENT.

1784. Counsellor and Client.—A simple citizen has waited on his lawyer with a document; the client is seated, very ill at ease; we can see that he is the person who will suffer; his face expresses perplexity and suspense. The counsellor is, on the contrary, very much at his ease, and is looking on the document confided to him, with ■ sly and satisfied expression, evidently seeing his way ■ some 'excellent practice.'

May 4, 1784. La Politesse François, or the English Ladies' Petition ■ His Excellency the Mushroom Ambassador. Published by H. Humphrey, Bond Street.—The representative of Louis XVI. is all bows and smirks, lace ruffles and cravat, sword, bagwig, and shoe-buckles; he has turned his face away from ■ bevy of fair English beauties, bejewelled, prodigiously feathered, and wearing long court trains; the ambassador is obdurate to the entreaties of his petitioners. 'Parbleu, mesdames, vous n'y viendrez pas.'

With clasped hands and bended knees,
They humbly sought the Count to please,
And begged admission to his house.
Not that for him they cared ■ lounge,
But wished within his walls to shine,
And show those charms they think divine.
His Ex. beheld these belles unmov'd—
His back their impudence reproved.

July 24, 1784. 1784, or the Fashions of the Day. H. Repton inv., T. Rowlandson fecit.—The Park, with its mixed crowd of fashionable promenaders and pleasure-seekers, has afforded the designer ample scope for the delineation of both grotesque and graceful figures, modishly apparelled. In 1784, while the older generation still clung to the garments characteristic of the earlier Georges, the younger branches rushed into all the latest innovations—costumes which ■ generally received ■ distinctive of the end of the last and the beginning of the present century. Thus to the observer of the picturesque the fashions of 1784 offered the external habits of two distinct epochs. Among other features, indicative of the introduction of novelties, the artist has represented the parasol, ■ more properly the umbrella, then an object likely to occasion remark, as its general ■ ■ just coming into fashion.

August 8, 1784. The Vicar and Moses. Published by H. Humphrey, 18 New Bond Street.—A pictorial heading, in Rowlandson's characteristic style, to the famous old song of 'The Vicar and Moses,' by G. A. Stevens. The Vicar has been dragged unwillingly from his ale-cup, by his clerk, to assist at the burial of ■ child; the family mourners are waiting in the churchyard, ■ shown in the picture; Moses, the clerk, has put on his bands and found the parson's place in his book, and he is lighting the erratic footsteps of his patron with ■ broken candle placed in a horn lantern; as to the rotund dignitary of the Church, he is reeling along reluctantly; he ■ ■ his cassock and bands, ■ ■ the daily fashion ■ one time, and his hat is thrust well over his full-bottomed wig, which is somewhat awry; in one hand he retains his faithful pipe, and his tobacco-box is held in the other. The verses, which ■ tolerably well known, offer ■ whimsical description of how the Vicar, who happened to be ■ si ipse (i.e. 'the parson was tipsy'), having been disturbed at his meditations over ■ pot of ale, was informed that he ■ required ■ read the burial service over the body of ■ of his flock; the pastor felt strongly inclined ■ remain where he was, and proposed to postpone the ceremonial.

Then Moses reply'd :
 'Sir, the parish will chide
 For keeping them out in cold weather.'
 'Then, Moses,' quoth he,
 'Go and tell 'em from me
 I'll bury them ■ all together !'

'But, sir, it rains hard ;
 Pray have ■ regard.'
 'Regard ! ay, 'tis that makes me stay,
 For no corpse, young or old,
 In rain can catch cold ;
 But faith, Moses, you and I may !'

Moses begg'd he'd ■ gone,
 Saying, 'Sir, the rain's done ;
 Arise, and I'll lend you my hand.'
 'It's hard,' quoth the Vicar,
 'To leave thus my liquor—
 To go when I'm ■ I can't stand.'

At length, tho' ■ troubled,
 To the churchyard he hobbled,
 Lamenting the length of the way.
 Then 'Moses,' said he,
 'Were I a Bishop, d'ye see,
 I need neither walk, preach, or pray !'

The whole composition is more humorous than reverential, but it indicates the ■ of the period, according to the last lines :—

'And thus we have carried the farce on :
 The taste of the times
 Will relish ■ rhymes,
 When the ridicule runs on a parson.'

November 1, 1784. New-Invented Elastic Breeches. Designed by Nixon. Etched by Rowlandson. Published by W. Humphrey.

November 8, 1784. Money-Lenders.—A young nobleman is receiving the visits of certain usurers. One Hebrew gentleman, the principal, ■ 'capitalist,' is dressed with ■ certain attention ■ the fashion of the day, which proves that he is by ■ means ■ insignificant member of the money-lending fraternity. A deed ■ bond, the security ■ which the young spendthrift is expecting an advance, is being duly examined by a ■ miserly-looking Shylock—'a little Jew-broker,' in fact. As ■ the borrower, it is clearly indicated that he ■ quite ■ his ease in the transaction; it seems evident that whatever money he may raise (regardless of the sacrifices ■ which he submits in obtaining it) will be quickly thrown to the winds, and 'the dose will have to be repeated as before' until his resources ■ exhausted.

September 25, 1784. Bookseller and Author.—A characteristic drawing, in Rowlandson's best recognised style, bearing the name of Henry Wigstead as inventor, published by J. R. Smith. The persons of the publisher and author present the marked and conventional extreme contrasts which the two spheres of life ■■■ supposed to suggest—the ■■■ gross and prosperous, the other meagre and miserable. The ■■■ of the interview may be assumed to be the back-shop of the bookseller; it is fitted around with shelves lined with books. The trader is stout and solid; his spectacles are thrust up ■■ his forehead, his pen is behind his ear, and his hands ■■■ held beneath his coat-tails, in a self-assertive attitude, implying well-to-do pomposity.

Wigstead, whose name is associated with authorship (although his professional position as ■ magistrate exempted him from the sufferings of a struggling literary hack), has painted the professional gentleman in ■■ flattering colours; the ■■■ of letters is wretchedly lean in person, and abjectly subservient in ■■■■ to the trafficker who is buying his ideas; his hat is held respectfully under his arm, and his manuscript, which he is endeavouring to recommend to his patron, is in his hand. One of the bookseller's clients, ■ respectable Church dignitary, who is looking through the library, with great owl-like horn spectacles ■■ his reverend nose, is present at the interview, and is regarding the poor literary hack with an air of inflated superiority.

MONY-TENDERS

1784. London, Made and Sold by Broderip and Wilkinson, 13 Haymarket.—A plate for a trade advertisement, introducing the figures Apollo, Daphne, &c., drawn and etched with considerable grace and spirit. Among Rowlandson's renderings of the works of other men ■ may mention ■ sketch after T. Mortimer, etched by T. R., 1784. This study portrays the back view of an Italian or Spanish peasant woman, playing the flute.

1784. The Historian Animating the Mind of a Young Painter.—This subject represents the painting-room of a young artist, furnished with a drawing-table, ■ easel, ■ couple of chairs, ■ settee, and ■ bust, while ■ few sketches of figure subjects ■ pinned ■ the walls. The painter, who is ■ well-favoured youth, is seated with his back ■ his easel, ■ which is ■ classic study in ■ of execution. His palette is on the ground, and he is holding a crayon in ■ hand, and a folio, which is serving as his drawing-board, in the other, ready to dash down his conceptions ■ ■ his imagination is sufficiently inspired by the effects of his friend's readings. The learned historian, whose hat and gloves ■ ■ his feet, wears a full-bottomed wig and large round rimmed spectacles. His appearance is somewhat clerical, and he is evidently filled with enthusiasm for the subject on which he is declaiming, book in hand. The limner's wife, in ■ morning dress, ■ seated by the fire, amusing her infant son, who is standing on her knee in ■ nude state, the infant being probably impressed into the service of the fine ■ the model for a cherubim. No publisher's ■ is given ■ this plate, which ■ delicately rendered.

1784. The print of a group of three figures ; in the centre is ■ pretty simple maiden, whose face ■ an artless expression, such as Rowlandson excelled in delineating, seated in ■ armchair, and grasping the hand of a youth, who has opened a vein in his arm, while another maid, in ■ morning cap and dress, is lending her assistance. The ■ of R. Batty has been given in MS. ■ 'sculpsit.' Both the drawing of the figures and the style of the etching are strongly indicative of Rowlandson's handiwork.

1784. Rest from Labour ■ Sunny Days. Designed and etched by T. Rowlandson.—A peasant is sitting in an easy attitude perched upon the ruins of ■ temple, playing the flute ; a pretty peasant maid is leaning beside him, with her dog ■ her feet. Etching and aquatinta.

1784. Billingsgate.—All the humours of this famous academy of slang ■ displayed. The fish-selling fags have their baskets planted in rows in front of the landing-place. The hampers of the porters and the ■ of ships' are seen beyond. The Billingsgate hawkers ■ offering their fish vociferously for sale, getting drunk, and generally behaving in the disorderly style attributed to them. A gouty customer, evidently ■ epicure, who has come to select a turbot for his table, is seized unceremoniously by his wig and coat-tails and tripped up in the exertions of ■ fishfag aided by her urchin ■ arrest the passer, and call attention ■ certain goods she is holding out for inspection.

1784. Miller's Waggon.

1784. A Timber Waggon. Published by E. Jackson, 14 Marylebone Street, Golden Square.

1784. Country Cart Horses.

1784. Dray Horses. Draymen and Maltsters.

1784. Higglers' Carts.

1784. A Post-chaise.

1784. A Cabriole.

Rowlandson's Imitations of Modern Drawings. Folio. 1784-88.

F. Wheatley	.	A Coast Scene, fishermen, fisherwomen, &c.
"	.	A Companion
Gainsborough	.	A Sketch ; trees, cottages, &c.
"	.	Cattle, river side.
F. Wheatley	.	A Fair.
Bartolozzi	.	A Pair of Cupids.
Barret and Gilpin	.	Mares and Foals.
"	.	Cattle.
Gainsborough	.	Landscape sketch.
Mortimer	.	A Storm at Sea.
Gainsborough	.	Cows.
Zucchi	.	Harmony. Two nymphs singing, another playing a lyre.
Mortimer	.	The Philosopher.
Barret	.	Ruins, and ■ Park.
Mortimer	.	A Study.
Barret	.	Ruins, &c.
Gainsborough	.	A Cottage, &c.
"	.	An Open Landscape.
Mortimer	.	Scene in 'The Tempest,' from Shakespeare. Republished 1801. J. P. Thompson, Soho.
G. Barret	.	Lake Scene.
Saurey Gilpin, R.A.	.	Horses.
G. Holmes	.	The Sage and his Pupil.
Michael Angelo	.	Leda and the Swan.
G. B. Cipriani	.	Sleeping Venus and Love.

1785.

January 7, 1785. The Fall of Achilles.—It ■■■ evident from the first that the chances of the members of the late Coalition Ministry returning to power ■■■ weakened in the new Parliament, and it soon became obvious that, even as an Opposition, their party was without either weight or influence. Fox in looking round the recently elected House found himself surrounded by country gentlemen, Pitt's following, whose faces were unfamiliar to him. Pitt was firmly settled, the unquestioned master of the situation. It is the youthful Premier who has come forth, in the character of Paris it is presumed, with a bow and a quiver of arrows, the better to shoot Whiggism on the wing; he has just sent a bolt straight into the flying Opposition; the arrow has lodged in the heel of the mighty Fox, who is represented double the size of his triumphant adversary.

Thus do I strive with heart and hand
To drive sedition from the land!

The Whig chief is disabled, in spite of his armour, and he is lying at the mercy of the enemy.

There is nought but a place or a pension will ease
The strain that I've got in my tendon Achilles.

The ■■■ of North and Burke ■■■ likely to follow; the prostrate form of Fox is tripping up his friend's retreat; North's sword and buckler ■■■ of ■■■ service ■■ him; he is crying in perplexity—

This curs'd eternal Coalition
Has brought ■■ to a rare condition.

Burke is trying to make good his escape.

Before thy arrows, Pitt, I fly;
I d—n that word prolixity.

January 24, 1785. Mock-Turtle. Published by S. W. Fores.

March 2, 1785. The Golden Apple, ■■ the Modern Paris. Published by J. Phillips, Piccadilly.—The Prince of Wales is represented in the enviable position of Paris, deciding between the respective attractions of the three Duchesses, Rutland, Devonshire, and Gordon, the rival luminaries whose brilliancy dazzled famed Cecilian Forces, on the plains of St. Martin, ■ Thursday, the 3rd day of February, 1785, by the Champion of the People and his Chosen Band.—Fox, ■ the head of his party, whose ■ legal weapons, such as Law, Eloquence, Perseverance, and Truth, is routing and putting to flight the combined forces of his opponents, led by Sir Cecil Wray and the High Bailiff, Corbett. At the Westminster Election it will be remembered, Fox had gained the victory over his antagonists; and the Scrutiny, moved for by Sir Cecil Wray, being concluded, the proper ■ directed to be made; and, ■ we have mentioned, the successful candidate brought ■ action and recovered heavy damages against the High Bailiff (who had made himself the tool of the Ministerialists). Fox is protected by his buckler, inscribed 'Majority 38;' he is sweeping away the 'Cecilian forces' with the sword of 'Justice;' a laurel ■ is placed ■ his brow by a celestial messenger, who is also charged with the decision of the Court—'It is ordered that Thomas Corbett, Esq., do immediately return.' Fox is declaring, 'The wrath of my indignation is kindled, and I will pursue them with a mighty hand and outstretched ■ until justice is done ■ those who have so nobly supported me.' Sir Cecil Wray's shield of Ingratitude is no defence, and his weapon has snapped short; he is crying in despair, 'My knees ■ feeble, and I sink beneath the weight of my ■ apostacy!' The High Bailiff is thrown down; he confesses, 'My conscience is ■ peace;' an ally is crying, 'Help, help! ■ chief is fallen. O conscience, support me!' Corbett's lawyers have turned their backs on the cause of the client: 'Nor law, nor conscience, nor the aid of potent Ministers, can e'er support the contest 'gainst such a chief!' 'Our support is gone and ■ fallen into a Pitt; yea, even into ■ deep Pitt!'

March 27, 1785. The surprising Irish Giant of St. James's Street. 'The surprising Irish Colossus, King of the Giants, measuring eight feet ■ inches; noble Order of St. Patrick, &c.'—The figure of the famous Irish Giant is drawn with skill and originality by Rowlandson. The person of this colossus, although gigantic, is graceful, and his proportions ■ such that the spectators who surround him are apparently dwarfed to half the usual standard. The giant's right hand is resting ■ the head of a military commander, the tallest man in the room, who, while standing bolt upright, does not reach much above the waistband of the Irish mammoth. Another officer, while standing ■ tiptoe on ■ chair, is still a full third short of the height of the prodigy. The ladies are struck with wonder ■ such gigantic limbs, and one of them is comparing her tiny foot with the large and well-proportioned member of the giant; while ■ of the audience are investing themselves in his top-boots. The skeleton of this remarkable person is preserved in the Hunterian Museum, College of Surgeons. 'Mr. Lynn related to-day that the surgeons, in spite of the vigilance of the Irish Giant's friends, obtained the body for dissection. They made several attempts bury it in the Thames, or to convey it to Dover. But the body-hunters were keen for all they aimed at; and after keeping the corpse fourteen days they sold it John Hunter for 100*l*. The heart preserved, and very large. . . . The stature of the skeleton measures eight feet two inches.'—'MS. Journal of Captain E. Thompson, R.N.' (Cornhill Magazine, May 1868.)

April 12, 1785. The Wonderful Pig. Published S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly. —The artist given a grotesque representation of the learned hog, spelling his words before a delighted audience; the individual characteristics of the spectators capitably diversified; their actions and groupings are, as usual, marked with vivacity. According to a placard over the mantel-piece of the hall in which this intellectual entertainment was offered learn: 'The surprising pig, well versed in all languages, perfect arithmetician, mathematician, and composer of music.'

May 27, 1784. Verses published 1785. The Waterfall, an Error in Judgement. Published by Wallis, Ludgate Hill.

The coxcomb, student, and attorney vile,
Jew bail and tipstaff, added to the pile;
All rush in terror, or from gain or sport,
And headlong tumble down the steps of Court.

The incident on which this print was founded occurred, according to the magazines, &c., in 1785; and, as illustrations appeared at the time, it seems that the artist has put the date of the year wrongly. The Waterfall represents the Court of King's Bench in uproar. The members of the Bench and the Bar, counsellors, attorneys, and clients, suitors and witnesses, are taking to flight indiscriminately, trampling over another in their precipitate retreat, tumbling down the stairs of Westminster Hall, while robes, wigs, and briefs are lost in the struggle.

Rowlandson's illustration of this of consternation is used the heading for a song to the of 'The Roast Beef of Old England.'

According to the song the recitative relates:—

'Twas the Hall of Rufus, Woodfall tells,
Where brawling, sneering Discord dwells;
Where honest men despond, where tricking thrives,
And Law against plain Reason ever strives,
A sudden fright seiz'd the black-rob'd race,
And inward horror mark'd each hideous face.

A maiden appear'd on the roof of the Hall,
And, washing a window, her water let fall,
Which frighten'd the mighty, short, and the tall.

Oh, the clean maid of Westminster !
And, oh, the clean Westminster maid !

Her trickling of water made such a sad noise,
It threw the Court into ■ horrid surprise ;
All feeling alike—alike they ■ rise.
Oh, the stout hearts of the lawyers !
And, oh, the lawyers' stout hearts !

They thought that the roof ■ all coming down ;
And knowing how much they deserv'd Heaven's frown,
All hasten'd, with loss of wig, band, and gown,
Out of the Court of Westminster,
And out of Westminster Court.

The Serjeants were wounded in limbs, nose, and eye ;
Like leaves of the Sibyls their briefs scattered lie—
A sight very pleasant to all standers-by.
Oh, the torn robes of the Benchers !
And, oh, the Benchers' torn robes !

For Ruspini's Styptic some half-dozen ■ ;
But the crowd stayed to laugh and enjoy the high fun ;
All hop'd the long thread of the Law was now spun.
Oh, what ■ joy to Old England !
And, oh, to Old England what joy !

But Heaven, to punish this half-ruin'd nation,
Permitted again each to take his old station,
The people to gall with the deepest vexation.
Oh, what a grief to Old England !
And, oh, to Old England what grief !

1785. Comfort in the Gout. (See July 1, 1802.) Republished 1802.

June 28, 1785. Vauxhall Gardens. Engraved by R. Pollard, aquatinted by F. Jukes. Published by John Raphael Smith.—It will be remembered by the reader that, in the earlier part of this sketch of Rowlandson's Life, Works, and Times, special reference is made by the artist's friend and the frequent companion of his adventures, Henry Angelo, to their expeditions to Vauxhall Gardens ■ study character. The varied humours discovered ■ this popular resort employed Rowlandson's pencil frequently, as we ■ told in the Memoirs. It seems, ■ the authority of those who were most intimate with the caricaturist, and who were also thoroughly well acquainted with the leading examples of his skill, that Vauxhall Gardens may be accepted ■ his chef d'œuvre in the general estimation. We ■ compare it to his drawing of the Tuileries Gardens, which is ■ fuller of diversified groups.

In the famous picture of Vauxhall we have the Rotunda, a marvellous construction, built from the designs of an inventive carpenter, a modest genius, who obtained ■ certain celebrity for his ingenuity.¹ 'The gilded scallop-shell,' described by Thackeray in the Vauxhall episode, which is introduced in the opening of Vanity Fair, was, as it appeared within the writer's recollection, a melancholy, tawdry substitute for the vanished splendours ■ noted in Rowlandson's drawing. A portly lady, standing in front of the orchestra, ■ warbling ballads to the highly genteel company, the patrons of the entertainment, of the performers we ■ able to offer but scanty particulars.

LOWICK IN THE COU

¹ 'The present Orchestra (1809) ■ first exhibited ■ the public ■ the 2nd June, 1735 It was built by ■ ingenious mechanic, named Maudman, ■ carpenter employed in the gardens, from ■ design of his own The composition with which ■ is ornamented ■ also his ■ discovery This elegant orchestra ■ calculated ■ contain fifty performers, with ■ organ, &c It ■ illuminated by about four thousand lamps, and presents ■ object of unparalleled brilliance The ■ ingenious ■ erected the rotunda, which ■ seventy feet in diameter, and represents ■ magnificent pavilion Within it is placed another orchestra where ■ musical part of the entertainment is performed ■ unfavourable weather Adjoining the saloon, with its ■ columns, and ■ paintings by Hayman, ■ ■ supper room, one hundred feet long and forty ■ wide, with a double row of columns On ■ walls are represented paintings of rural scenery, which answer to the intercolumniations At ■ end ■ ■ room ■ the ■ of Handel, ■ white marble, and ■ the character of Orpheus singing ■ his

The figure of the fair vocalist is evidently intended for that of Mrs. Weichsel, ■ Vauxhall favourite, already mentioned ■ the mother of the great Mrs. Billington, the pride of English operatic celebrities. It ■ ■ Mrs. Weichsel's benefit, which Rowlandson attended ■ 'the little theatre in the Haymarket,' that ■ artist produced a sketch of this musical family. To return ■ Vauxhall. Angelo and other informants supply us with a hint or two of the company. Daniel Arrowsmith was engaged as one of the principal singers, 'where Mrs. Kennedy and that capital bass, Sedgwick, entertained the public for several seasons.' Joe Vernon, of Drury Lane Theatre, is mentioned among the performers. Barthelemon ■ leader of the band; Fisher played the hautboy; and Mr. Hook was conductor and composer.

To describe the visitors: the ■ conspicuous figures, which occupy the centre of the picture, and ■ exciting the admiring regards of the frequenters of Vauxhall scattered around them, ■ understood to be intended for the fascinating Duchess of Devonshire and her sister, Lady Duncannon. Among the 'freaks of folly' recorded by ■ invaluable authority Angelo he mentions having frequently 'seen many of the nobility, particularly the Duchess of Devonshire, &c. (the ' &c.' expressing ■ whole crowd of fashionable notorieties), with ■ large party, supping in the ■ facing the orchestra, French horns playing to them all the time.'

Captain Topham, the macaroni-scribbler of fashionable intelligence and genteel scandalmonger ■ The World, ■ newspaper of which he was conjointly proprietor, editor, and principal contributor, is standing upright ■ ■ post, dressed in ■ smart uniform, and quizzing the fair through his glass. A stout old Commander, stranded on shore, with only one eye and ■ leg left from his naval glories, is planted, lost in admiration, on the Duchess's right. This gallant veteran ■ understood to represent Admiral Paisley, the reputed original, according ■ the caricaturist, who has drawn his portrait ■ than once, of 'The Tough Old Commodore'—

Why, the bullets and the gout
Have so knocked his hull about,
That he'll ■ like the sea any more!

A clerical person over the shoulder of Lady Duncannon is ■ free render-lyre; but it is ■ removed behind the orchestra in the garden. This fine piece of sculpture first introduced the abilities of Roubiliac ■ the notice of the public. It ■ begun and completed in the place of which it ■ the ornament, while the noble subject and the superior artist ■ enjoying the friendly ■ protecting hospitality of Mr. Jonathan Tyers, who purchased ■ place in 1730, and opened ■ ■ attractive entertainment which he ■ a Ridotto al Fresco.

' ■ grove, principal entrance, and other parts of the gardens ■ ■ with a number of small pavilions, ornamented with paintings, chiefly by Hogarth ■ Hayman: each containing ■ and seats, ■ which the company retire ■ partake of refreshments.'—Miscosm of London.

ing, it is hinted, of Bate Dudley, who ■ the hero of ■ somewhat notorious Vauxhall adventure. By the side of the reverend sable-clad editor of the Morning Post stands ■ handsome figure, dressed in full Highland costume, with ■ veritable claymore under his arm, of which the bearer ■ reported to well know the use; this gentleman's person is reported to be introduced as a compliment to another editor, James Perry, of the Morning Chronicle, who was, Angelo relates, very expert with the Highland broadsword, its exercise being his favourite diversion; 'he might be frequently ■ at masquerades and places of entertainment, dressed in the costume of a Highlander, with ■ party of Scotch lassies, dancing Scotch reels. For variety of steps, Highland flings, &c., he ■ particularly noted; crowds collected round him.'

Another conspicuous group introduces the Prince of Wales, afterwards George the Fourth, then ■ sweet youth, whose persuasions ■ supposed ■ be irresistible, and 'whose smile was victory;' he is represented whispering soft flatteries in the ■ of ■ not unwilling fair, whose right hand is held captive under the ■ of ■ gentleman, presumably her better half. This tender situation is reported to indicate ■ well-known episode in the career of the Heir Apparent, which, although somewhat threadbare, ■ retains an air of romance. 'Prince Florizel,' wearing his brilliant star on his breast, is addressing himself covertly ■ the most conspicuous figure of the party, the captivating Mrs. Robinson by general acceptance, the graceful Perdita, in connection with whom, as the artist has drawn him, the Prince is said ■ have

Gazed on the fair
Who caused his care,
And sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again.

The lady is coyly trifling with ■ trinket suspended by ■ chain round her shapely throat, possibly the identical locket affectingly alluded ■ by the 'British Sappho' (as not impartial admirers subsequently dubbed the fair poetess) in her Memoirs; this gage d'amour, which is almost historical in the chronicle of small affections, containing Prince George's portrait, then a handsome, fine-complexioned youth, with a profusion of fair hair, as painted in miniature by Meyer, was presented in ■ early stage of the flirtation to the lady, through Lord Malden, the Leporello of the transaction. Within the case of this tribute of tenderness ■ a heart, appropriately cut in paper, ■ one side of which ■ inscribed, 'Je ne change qu'en mourant;' and on the other, 'Unalterable to my Perdita through life;' a lover's protestation which ■ not remarkably verified by the subsequent inconstancy of the impressible Florizel.

Within ■ supper-box—one of those grotesque-looking cabinets which many who have visited the shades of Vauxhall may still bear in vivid remembrance—is assembled another convivial party, the members of which have been described—we are inclined to suspect without any sufficiently valid foundation—as the representatives of ■ illustrious and very familiar literary coterie. A stout personage, in the centre, of massive proportions, has been adopted ■ a free rendering of the person of the famous Doctor Johnson, who is pictured ■ characteristically intent on his supper, and indifferent alike to his company and the sprightly society which surrounds his box; seated in a corner, ■ the great lexicographer's left, anecdotic Boswell is shown, pausing, open-mouthed, to catch the good things that may fall from his eminent leader; Mrs. Thrale, ■ Johnson's right, is saying something very pertinent ■ Oliver Goldsmith, who is endeavouring to carve the contents of his plate. His stolid features do not express anything approaching ■ rapturous appreciation of the accomplished blue-stocking's extraordinary flow of bewitching conversation.

Before we leave the attractive vicinity of Vauxhall Gardens, ■ its picturesque humours ■ noted by ■ an able hand ■ century ago, ■ must offer a few traits of the delightful old haunt and the wicked ways of its frequenters. Our inexhaustible informant Angelo is considerate enough ■ enlighten our more repressive generation on the practices of the period.

The dashers of the day, instead of returning home in the morning from Vauxhall, used ■ repair to the Star and Garter, at Richmond; and, on ■ occasions, the madcap excursions ■ pushed farther. Angelo mentions a party of which he had formed a member, when, while crossing Westminster Bridge, the sight of ■ boat suggested ■ fresh act of extravagant frolic, ■ less than being rowed to the Tower, taking places, and straightway setting off in the famous hoy for the sea-trip to Margate, which in those times ■ quite ■ journey.

We have already introduced ■ certain witty and pugilistic divine; let ■ avail ourselves of Angelo's remembrances of ■ incident in his career, the scene of which belongs to the print we have been endeavouring to elucidate for ■ readers. Parson Bate—better known by this soubriquet than by his later title ■ Sir Bate Dudley—who ■ at the time editor of the Morning Post, obtained the nickname of the Fighting Parson, from ■ memorable affray in Vauxhall Gardens.

The particulars of the fracas are thus related in the Reminiscences:—'Mr. Parson Bate, ■ magnificent ■ piece of humanity, perhaps, ■ ever walked arm-in-arm with a fashionable beauty in the illuminated groves of Vauxhall, ■ promenading and chatting, with the celebrated Mrs. Hartley,¹ her Woodstock glove gently rubbing against his sable sleeve; when Mr. Fitzgerald (who subsequently hanged in Ireland for certain malpractices), in company with Lord Littleton and Captain O'Bourne, ungallantly gave offence to the lady and her protector by severally turning short round upon her and, with the most marked rudeness, staring in her face. This offensive behaviour resented by Mr. Bate, and, if my memory does not deceive me, he chastised the offenders on the spot.'

¹ 'Mrs. Hartley ■ ■ of ■ popularity; ■ celebrated, however, for her beauty. She ■ ■ of those ladies whose ■ the stage ■ without reproach. ■ painted by several of the ■ artists, and among others by ■ Joshua Reynolds, in one of her best characters. No female, perhaps, ■ appeared on the stage looked more lovely ■ in Fair Rosamond. Mr., afterwards ■ Dudley, married the sister of ■ lady.'

Mr. Bate's paper, The Morning Post, obtained much celebrity by the exposure of the three gentlemen for their rude attack upon a lady. The rencontre begot a paper war, which was, for several weeks, maintained with great animosity on both sides; but the superior wit and powerful satire of Parson Bate were so manifest that his opponents were beaten out of the literary arena.

'Subsequent proceedings led to a meeting of the parties at a tavern, where, it seems, an explanation was entered into and an apology offered. This, as appeared later on, was a discreditable stratagem on the part of the aggressors to revenge themselves on this redoubtable priest, by procuring for him, as they anticipated, a sound drubbing; they had, however, once more mistaken their man.

'These three confederates met according to appointment, and Mr. Bate brought his friends too. A strapping spark was then introduced to the party—Captain —, who had been prompted to insult the pugnacious reverend, with the hope of provoking him to a personal attack, at Vauxhall. This mock captain was a well-known prize-fighter. The parson, not at all daunted by the insolent threats of the ruffian, fell upon him, and with his own weapons, so completely thrashed him that he was taken away almost senseless in a hackney-coach.'

A farewell incident of Vauxhall, and we will leave for good the precincts memorable in the history of the past. This time we were carried to the rendezvous with Angelo and his friends in company with the most incorrigible blades of the town.

'Lord Barrymore's fondness for eccentricities ever engaged his mind. Whether in London or Wargrave 'twas all the same—always in high spirits, thinking of what fun he should have during the day. Seated, after dinner, at eleven o'clock, at one of the hottest evenings in July, he proposed that the whole party should go to Vauxhall.

'The carriage being ordered, it was directly filled inside; and the others outside, with more wine than wit, made no little noise through the streets.

'We had been long at Vauxhall when Lord Barrymore called to a young clergyman, at a little distance from us, who, when he approached and asked, "Have you had any supper?" to our surprise answered, "Vy, as how, my lord, I have not as yet had none." A waiter passing by ■ the time, Lord Barrymore said, " You know me ; let that gentleman have whatever he calls for ; " when he told the parson to ■ to, and call for ■ much arrack punch ■ he pleased. " Thank ye, my lord," said he, " for I begins to be hungry, and I don't ■ how ■ I pecks a bit."

' Lord Barrymore had that morning, unknown to us, contrived ■ dress Tom Hooper, the tin-man (one of the first pugilists of that time), ■ a clergyman, to be in waiting ■ Vauxhall, in case we should get into any dispute. This fistic knight now filled the place of a lackey, and ■ constantly behind the carriage, ■ votary of black eyes and disfigured faces. His black clothes, formal hat, hair powdered and curled round, so far disguised him that he was unknown ■ us all at first, though Hooper's queer dialect must have soon discovered him to the waiters. This ■ ■ de guerre of Lord Barrymore's. About three o'clock, whilst at supper, Lord Falkland, Henry Barry, Sir Francis Molineux, &c., ■ of ■ party ; there was at this time ■ continual noise and rioting, and the arrack punch ■ beginning to operate.

' On ■ sudden all ■ seen running towards the orchestra, the whole garden seemed ■ be in confusion, and ■ party, ■ impatience, sallied out, those ■ the further end of the box walking over the table, kicking down the dishes. It seems that the effects of the punch had ■ only got into Hooper's head but had excited an influence over his fists, for he ■ for fighting with everybody. A large ring was made, and, advancing in ■ boxing attitude, he offered ■ fight anyone ; but all retired before him. Felix M'Carthy, ■ tall, handsome Irishman, well known by everybody at that time, ■ forced his way through the crowd and collared him, at the same time saying, " You rascal, you ■ Hooper, the boxer ; if you do not leave the garden this instant I'll kick you out." The affrighted crowd, who before retreated ■ he approached them, ■ came forward, when Hooper, finding himself surrounded, and hearing a general cry of " Kick him out !" made his retreat as fast as possible, thus avoiding the fury of those who would not have spared him out of the gardens, if he had been caught. We found him at five in the morning behind Lord Barrymore's carriage, with the coachman's great-coat on, congratulating himself upon having avoided the vengeance of those to whom, ■ short time previously, he had been ■ object of fear.'

July 24, 1785. The Slang Society.

August 11, 1785. Introduction.—There is hardly sufficient authority to warrant the editor in directly ascribing this print ■ Rowlandson ; the work is evidently early, and very French in the characteristics of costumes, ■ roundings, and subject. There ■ points in the etched outline and in the general spirit and method of execution, which lead ■ the impression that Rowlandson ■■■ least answerable for the etching and mezzotinting of the design. From the costumes ■■■■ by the figures the date of the subject may be assumed ■■ be ■■■■ time before the French Revolution. An overdressed old abbess, her head and shoulders enveloped in ■ cardinal, is introducing ■ French peer, who is toothless and decrepit, ■ ■ tall and fashionably-attired beauty, who is rising ■ receive the visitor with ■ air of dignified modesty.

AÉROSTATION OUT AT ■■■■ OR ■■■ ITINERANT AÉRONAUT.

September 5, 1785. Acrostation out at Elbows, or the Itinerant Aeronaut.

Vincent Lunardi

Behold ■ hero, comely, tall, and fau !
 His only food ■ philogistic an !
 Now on the wings of mighty winds he rides !
 Now torn through hedges ! dash'd ■ ocean tides !
 Now drooping roams about from town to town,
 Collecting pence to inflate his poor Balloon
 Pity the wigl t and something to him give,
 To purchase gas ■ keep his frame alive !

■■■ ■■■ ■■■ A JFW

1785. Going, a going — A handsome young huntsman has encountered, in the ■■■■ of his sport, ■ pretty country maiden, neatly appparelled, and beaming with all the freshness of rustic simplicity and artlessness. Her budding charms ■■ tempting the youth to court the maiden, to her own manifest embarrassment ; meanwhile the gay Lothario's huntsman is shown in the distance 'going' off with the horses the young squire's hunting, as far as the chase of the fox ■ concerned, being evidently finished for the day.

1785. Gone !

September 30, 1785. Too Many for a Jew. Published by S. Alken, Soho.

October 1, 1785. An Essay on the Sublime and Beautiful. Published by T. Cornell, Bruton Street.—A ragged enthusiast, who, having gathered from the shoe half-thrust into his coat-pocket, combines the cobbler of human souls with the cobbling of leather soles, is holding forth to a devout congregation.

AN ESSAY ON THE SUBlime AND BEAUTIFUL

The companion print to this caricature is called The Maiden Speech, and represents a Member, on the floor of the House, favouring the representatives of the people therein assembled with their first experience of his oratorical powers within the Parliamentary walls.

October 5, 1785. Captain Epilogue. Republished March 7, 1786, by E. Jackson, 14 Marylebone Street, Golden Square.—The figure of Captain Topham, (afterwards Colonel) of the World newspaper, of which he was proprietor, editor, critic, and scandalmonger—the fashionable intelligencer, arbiter elegantiarum, and man of fashion and gallantry. We find the macaroni soldier and journalist ■ prominent personage in the satirical effusions of his time; ■ recognise him among Gillray's caricatures ■ the Thunderer (August 20, 1782), and later as ■ Windmill, standing forth advocating the interests of Mrs. Robinson, the Perdita who, deserted by the Prince of Wales, found, it ■ hinted, refuge in the championship of Captain Epilogue. In another cartoon Major Topham is bringing his lengthy ■ Pitt's pay-table, 'for puffs and squibs,' the literary services which he had placed ■ the Ministerial disposal, and directed against the Whig candidate, Lord John Townshend, during the Westminster Election (August 14, 1788), which occurred when Lord Hood ■ appointed ■ the Treasury Board. We find the gallant quill attacking merit where it crossed his partialities, and ■ present caricature ■ designed to expose the Captain's tendresse for the actress of his choice. Epilogue is dressed, as he is always represented, in the height of the latest French fashion, his coat, his stockings, his pumps, his frill and ruffles, and his wig and queue being the very latest importations from Paris; ■ finger-post is pointing to the Wells, and the somewhat suggestive and highly modish figure of the lady is drawn below it.

1785. A Cully Pillaged. (Same date as Comfort in Gout.)—A stalwart-looking bully has suddenly burst into an apartment; he has seized and is securely holding ■ alarmed individual, whose hat is thrown off and his wig is knocked awry; his pigtail is rigid with terror; he is standing on tiptoe, his limbs paralysed with fear, while a very picturesque-looking Cyprian, with hair and dress in somewhat dishevelled condition, is deliberately exploring the pockets of the victim.

1785. Copper-plate Printers at Work.—This sketch, which is vastly interesting, is probably drawn from the ■ in which the caricaturist's etchings ■ pulled, ■ apartment evidently ■ the sky. A couple of stalwart printers ■ hard ■ work rubbing ink into the copper-plates. A sturdy workman ■ turning the press, while a little oddity of ■ printer is drawing ■ impression from the copper lately under pressure. A connoisseur, in spectacles, of the old-fashioned type, ■ holding up ■ print ■ arm's length with ■ deeply critical expression on his sharp features. Numerous prints ■ hung up to dry ■ lines stretched ■ the chamber.

About 1785. A Bed-warmer.—Another print, which ■ published about this date, bears the name of H. Wigstead as delt. et fecit; but, by a strange anomaly, although a few strokes of the outline here and there belong to Wigstead's hand, which, from its untutored, straggling style, is easy of recognition, the figures and filling in ■■ unmistakably by Rowlandson, who has paid his friend the compliment of ascribing the entire credit of the composition ■ his ■■■■. The subject represents ■ bedchamber; clothes, &c., ■■ scattered about the ■■■■; ■ venerable libertine, whose bed has evidently been recently warmed, is endeavouring to retain by her skirt a remarkably handsome and sprightly-looking chambermaid, whose figure is gracefully expressed in Rowlandson's ■■■■ felicitous manner, both as regards ease and action. The offended nymph ■ making off with the chamber candle and the warming-pan, the latter ■ formidable weapon for the defence of assaulted virtue.

1785. Temptation.—A companion plate was executed under the ■■■■ auspices, but the ■■■■ of H. Wigstead in this instance appears ■ designer only. It represents ■ scene of temptation. A decrepit and, as far as years go, venerable libertine is offering certain proposals to ■ pretty and finely-shaped maiden, who is weighing ■ purse with an air of indecision, while the vicious dotard is pressing her disengaged hand and leaning on her shoulder. The chamber is evidently the workroom of a cobbler; his bench and a pile of shoes in the foreground have been thrown over by the gambols of a dog and cat. In this ■■ it is easy ■ see that if the maiden does not retire from the struggle with unstained hands, the elderly reprobate, whose crutch is under his arm, will not come off unscathed, for behind the curtains of the bed, in the shadow of the apartment, which seems ■■■■ as workroom, kitchen, parlour, and bedroom in one, appears the half-concealed and brawny person of the cobbler himself, who is evidently enjoying the prospect of the vengeance which he is about to let fall on the head of the old sinner.

1785. Grog ■ Board. (See Jan. 1794.) Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.

1786. Tea on Shore. (See June 1794.) Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.

November 24, 1785. By Authority Persons and Property Protected. Published by S. W. Fores.—His Majesty's (G.R.) Royal Mail Coach is in a quandary; ■■ horse is down, and ■ second is rearing; the hind wheel is off; ■ fair traveller is sent sprawling ■ the ground in ■■ attitude which is neither easy ■■ becoming. An unfortunate passenger has lost his wig, and in seeking to recover it has become jammed in the coach-window. The coachman has lost his balance, and the shock is capsizing his seat; the concussion has discharged the huge blunderbuss borne by the guard through the letter-bags; the mails, and other ■■■■ are scattered ■ the winds by the explosion; and, to cap the misfortune, the lurch has accidentally loosened the trigger of ■ huge horse-pistol carried in the guard's belt for extra security, and the contents are peppering an unfortunate lady who has fallen on the highway.

INVASION ON STUDY, OR THE FAINIFR DISCALKID

November 28, 1785. Doctors Differ. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.

November 30, 1785. The Sad Discovery, ■ the Graceless Apprentice. Published by J. R. Smith, 83 Oxford Street.

November 30, 1785. Intrusion on Study, or the Painter Disturbed. Published by S. W. Fores.—The studio of ■ artist, who is somewhat of ■ macaroni; the painter is hard at his work; ■ his easel is ■ classic subject; the principal figure is drawn from a pretty girl, his model, who is 'sitting' before him; ■ squire and ■ young foxhunter ■■ dashing in, alike disregarding of the remonstrances of the artist and the confusion into which their unceremonious entry has thrown his blushing model, whose nude figure he is endeavouring to block out with his palette. (Republished July 1, 1802.)

November 31, 1785. Jockeyship. Published by J. R. Smith, 83 Oxford Street.—A view of that portion of the racing-ground where the jockeys are about to mount. Various interested groups are represented as surrounding the riders, and secret counsel, at the last moment, is given to jockeys by owners of horses—possibly parting instructions to ride either ■ winning ■ ■ losing race, as their private arrangements may require. That the proceedings of the Turf ■■■ not perfectly pure and above the comment of suspicion in the infancy of horse-racing is indicated by the caricaturist in the last action of 'jockeyship'; the riders, while shaking hands finally with their owners and backers, are shown taking care to keep their left hands open behind their backs for bribes from the other side; this signal is meeting a golden response. The crowded stand and the ■■■■ ■■ sketched in the background.

December 1785. An Italian Family. Rowlandson, delt.; Alken, fecit. (See 1792.) Published December 1785 by S. Alken, Dufour's Place, Broad Street, Soho. Sold by W. Hinton, Sweetings Alley, Cornhill.

A French Family. Sold by W. Hinton, Sweetings Alley, Cornhill. (Republished 1792.)

December 15, 1785. Courtship in High Life. Courtship in Low Life.—A pair of prints designed and executed by Rowlandson in imitation of drawings, and belonging ■ the same period as the ■■■ finished and special works which the artist produced published by J. R. Smith. In the former subject High Life Courtship is represented in the figure of an elegant young noble—probably meant for the Prince of Wales—kneeling at the feet of ■ graceful and charming young lady of extreme fashion; the portrait exhibits certain indications of being intended for that of Mrs. Fitzherbert. There is ■ great deal of animation and good ■■■ in the composition. The companion print of Low Life Courtship introduces ■ British sailor, (who has lost an eye and gained a wooden leg in the service of his country), pouring out a bumper of spirits and regarding with a longing eye a careless and semi-intoxicated-looking damsel, who, in spite of evident symptoms of dissipation, is represented as buxom, fresh-looking, and well-favoured.

December 15, 1785. City Courtship.

December 15, 1785. Rustic Courtship. Published by J. R. Smith, 83 Oxford Street. H. Wigstead, del.—Rowlandson has given his unmistakable characteristics to this plate, which is executed in outline etching, and filled in in aquatint, in admirable facsimile of the artist's drawings, washed in Indian ink, and tastefully coloured. A fair cottage beauty is spinning flax; her wheel is placed outside the cottage-door; she is being stared at in admiration by a rustic Colin Clout, who is grinning from ear to ear and scratching his forehead in perplexity. Hop-poles are visible in the distance, and the landscape is one of those pretty country scenes such as may often be seen in England.

December 1785. Filial Affection, or a Trip to Gretna Green. (Companion to The Return from Gretna Green, or Reconciliation.)—This plate, which is executed in mezzotint, is usually worked up in imitation of a water-colour drawing—its resemblance to the original sketch, if judiciously tinted after Rowlandson's drawing, is sufficiently close to prove deceptive. A post-carriage is tearing along down hill, on the road to Gretna Green, drawn by four prancing horses, ridden by a pair of jockeys, and pursued by a posse of mounted horsemen. The foremost rider, a squire, booted and spurred, is coming close to the elopers and flourishing his whip revengefully at the occupants of the chaise; his horse is turned aside by the threatening attitude of the fugitives. The lady, her feathers flying in the wind, is leaning out of a window, pointing a formidable pistol at her parent's head; while the dandified young swain who is the abductor in this case is pointing a second pistol through the other window. The rest of the chase are lost in the clouds of dust which the wheels of the post-chaise are throwing in the air. One venerable gentleman's hat and wig are being left far behind, like those of an old friend John Gilpin.

December 17, 1785. The Reconciliation, or the Return from Scotland. Published by W. Hinton, Sweetings Alley, Royal Exchange.—The pair of fugitives seen in the previous subject are now, like a brace of repentant turtle-doves, returning to the family nest which they had rashly forsaken. The gallant husband is all submission and civility, pointing to the tears of his bride and their intercessors to the hearts of the parents. The father is indicating that a place at his fireside is still the right of his child; the old footman is joyfully placing a chair for his young mistress; and the servants, introduced in the doorway of the apartment, are in ecstasies to see the runaway couple and the domestic breach happily repaired.

RECONCILIATION, OR THE SCOTLAND.

December 21, 1785 Bothsation (Bar). Published by W. Hunter. (Engraved by Alken) Dedicated to the Gentlemen of the Bar

December 21, 1785. The Loss of Eden and Eden Lost N.B. 'Every man has his price'—Sir Robert Walpole's politics. Published by W. Hinton, 5 Sweetings Alley, Royal Exchange—This caricature gives the portraits of two would be benefactors of their country, who, the satirist is inclined to hint, were acting from purely disinterested motives. General Arnold, dressed in his uniform, and with his sword drawn, while offering up an invocation to Liberty, is one of the figures; Eden (Lord Auckland) is the other; the patriotic statesman has also apostrophised Liberty, and successfully in his instance, with his pen, his pocket is well supplied with those good things which have fallen to his share—'6,000*l.* per annum,' 'Commissioner to America,' 'Commercial Negotiator to France'

NO. 1

Two patriots in the self-same age born,
And both alike have gain'd the public scorn
This to America did much pretend,
The other to Ireland a friend
Yet sword or oratory would not do,
As each had different plans in view
America lost! Arnold, and, alas!
To lose our Eden is come to pass

1785. Sympathy, or a Family on a Journey laying the Dust. Designed and etched by T. Rowlandson. Published by W. Humphrey.—The halt of a coach on the road. The occupants have descended, and the coachman and footman, horses, &c., occupied as described by the title.

1785. John Gilpin's Return to London. Aquatinta by F. Jukes.

Away went Gilpin, and away
Went Postboy at his heels,
The Postboy's horse right glad to miss
The lumbering of the wheels.

Six gentlemen upon the road,
Thus seeing Gilpin fly,
With Postboy scamp'ring in the rear,
They rais'd the hue and cry :

'Stop thief! stop thief! a highwayman!'
Not one of them was mute ;
So they, and all that pass'd that way,
Soon join'd in pursuit.

1785. Harmony—Discord. A pair of contrasts.—Harmony is a remarkably graceful example of the artist's skill in indicating pleasing forms and easy, flowing outlines. The warrior, we presume, is relaxing the ■■■■ front of Mars by the practice of the softer arts, and is seated at the side of ■ fair companion, who is holding her hero's music-book on her lap.

1785. Effects of Harmony. (Companion to the above.)

1785. Tastes Differ.—An antiquated individual, evidently ■ connoisseur of old prints, dressed in his morning cap and dressing-gown, is buried in the study of a large folio spread before him; all his admiration is absorbed in his hobbies, to the neglect of a young and pretty ■■■■ by his side, who is consoling herself, in dreams, for the neglect with which as the plate seems to hint, the superannuated spouse is treating the charms of her company and person.

NAP IN THE COUNTRY.

1785. Nap in the Country. Nap in Town. Published by S. Alken, Dufour's Place, Soho.—A Nap in the Country represents the mid-day rest of a rustic pair, who, while their sheep are calmly grazing and their dog is keeping faithful watch, are, beneath the shadows of spreading trees, indulging in 'forty winks' in the open country, after their early morning toils.

A Nap in Town, which may also be taken as an afternoon siesta, though equally luxurious, is not enjoyed under such healthy conditions as the preceding:

NAP IN TOWN.

SEA AMUSEMENT, ■ COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ■ CUP AND BALL ON A CRUISE.

the ■■■ pair are taking their repose with as much lazy ■■■ the circumstances will permit.

OPERA BOXES.

1785. Sea Amusement, or Commanders-in-Chief of Cup and Ball ■■■ Cruise.
-It appears from this print, which in the coloured editions is judiciously tinted

■ make it resemble ■ drawing, that the inactivity of ■ commanders ■ sea was attracting popular ■■■■■ In the plate ■ find the admiral and his commodore, ■■■■■ BOX.

instead of sweeping the foes of Britain from the ocean, ■■■ the desire of the entire nation, seated in the state-cabin, with a pile of gold-pieces on the ground, devoting their energies ■■ gambling with ■ child's toy. Scattered around and trodden upon unheeded ■■■ plans of fortifications to be bombarded, the charts of ■■■■ to be navigated, and rough draughts for the arrangement of the ships ■■ the beginning of ■ sea-fight, such ■■ we find Nelson drew up for the guidance of his captains before going into action ■■ the ■■■ of his glorious victories. An old salt, who is pouring out tea for these degenerate warriors, is regarding their puerile dispositions with an air of disgust and distress.

December 26, 1785. French Travelling, or the First Stage from Calais.

December 26, 1785. English Travelling, or the First Stage from Dover.

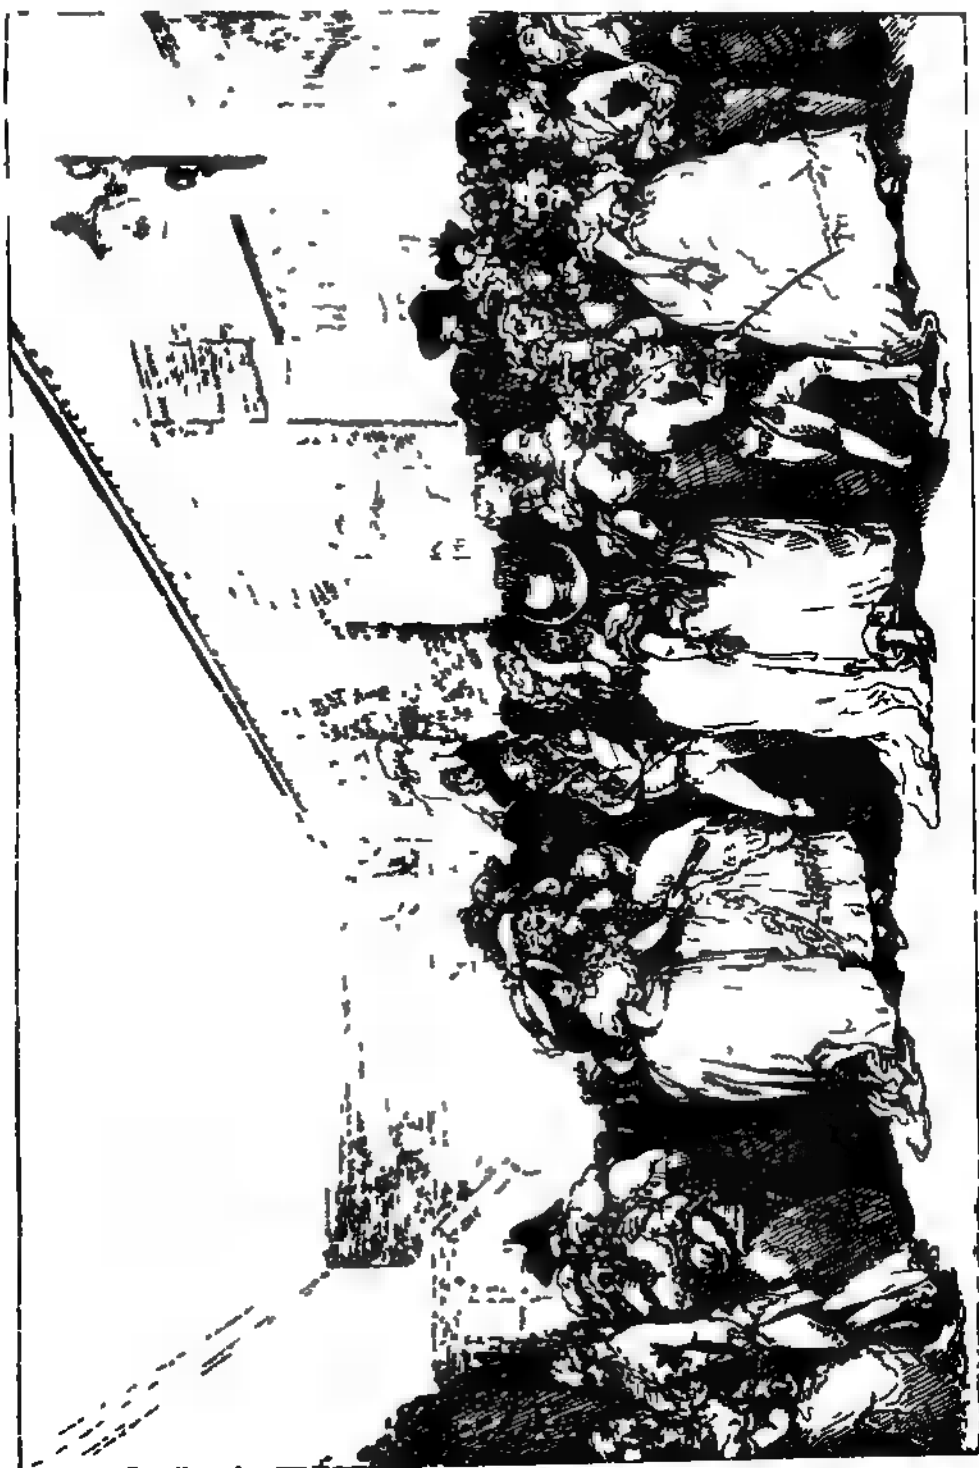

1785. (?) Opera Boxes.

1786.

January 1, 1786. The Supplemental Magazine. Published January 1, 1786, by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.

January 1, 1786. Private Amusement. (See October 28, 1781), E. O. — the Fashionable Vowels.

January 5, 1786. Box-Lobby Loungers. Designed by H. Wigstead ; etched by Rowlandson ; published January 5, 1786, by J. R. Smith, 83 Oxford Street.—The diversities of character introduced into this drawing, which is one of Rowlandson's larger productions, entitle it to a prominent place in a collection of the artist's works. Glimpses of the theatre are seen through the open doors. In the coloured editions of this plate, which is scarce and valuable, the most conspicuous figure is that of a military hero, the adventurous Colonel George Hanger (afterwards Lord Coleraine), companion and instigator of the Prince of Wales's early frolics ; well known to the satirists, and in short one of the notorieties of his generation. This inveterate 'man about town' is shown with his invariable companion, christened by the eccentric Colonel, who rejoiced in a vocabulary of his own, his 'Supple-Fack,' a thick stick carried under his arm ; the gallant loungeur, who has left the world a volume of eccentric Memoirs, with his Advice to Lovely Ciprians by way of Appendix, is lost in admiration of two highly attractive nymphs, possible members of the 'Sisterhood ;' while Georgey Hanger's truant eyes are engaged in the contemplation of the personal charms of these butterflies of fashion, the hand of a pickpocket is equally ready to carry off the Colonel's seals from his fob, as a souvenir of the rencontre. On the right of the ubiquitous hero another pair of lovely damsels, displaying the follies of the mode in their attire, are attracting the somewhat marked attentions of a circle of elderly admirers. A dwarfed and deformed beau, elaborately dressed in the French fashion, probably designed for the figure of Sir Lumley Skeffington, who was the authority, among the bucks and 'fashionables' of his day, on theatrical matters, is getting into trouble by the awkwardness into which his own sight and his gallantry are combining to betray him ; the train of an antiquated belle is coming in grief through the clumsiness of The Skeffington. The lady, whose native charms, in their decay, are considerably heightened by art, has evidently availed herself of her fortune ■ secure ■ handsome dandified young cavalier ; ■■ sturdy old retired sea-captains ■■ contemplating the ' Skittish Skeffy,' and his monkey-like escapades with expressions of profound contempt. A superannuated man of quality, ■ venerable beau of scarecrow aspect, is foppishly cultivating the good graces of ■ dashing 'girl of the period ;' while two extraordinary Don Juans, who, judging from their exteriors, would not be suspected of engaging themselves in amorous intrigues, are enlisting the friendly offices of ■ comfortable old body, who unites the twin occupations of selling oranges and play-bills, with the manipulation of delicate negotiations, a recognised and experienced ambassadress, in fact, to the court of Cytherea, duly credentialised, and, as far as appearances ■■ be relied on, a thoroughly discreet and capable person in her profession. A play-bill, adhering to the green-baize-covered walls of the Lobby, is intended ■ apply ■ the situation of the frivolous habitués who ■■ haunting the crowded lounge—' The Way of the World,' and ' Who's the Dupe ?' Beyond the main groups ■■ have particularised, there ■■ ■■ individuals scattered about, probably well-known characters in their generation, whose persons and portraits were doubtless familiarly recognised ■ the date Rowlandson favoured ■■ contemporaries with this suggestive view of their private amusements in the Box Lobbies.

FOX-LOVEY LOUNGERS

January 13, 1786. Love and Learning, or the Oxford Scholar. Drawn by Rowlandson Engraved and published by B. Smith, 10 Pleasant Row, Battle Bridge.—A print engraved in somewhat peculiar style as an attempted facsimile after the original drawing. The subject is an undergraduate, who ■ leading a tall and graceful female tastefully dressed in white, through a wood ; the cavalier is pointing ■■ the beauties of the scene ; the face of ■ forsaken lady, wearing ■■ malignant expression, appears from the concealment afforded by the forest shade.

Beauty invites, and love and learning plead ;
The Oxford scholar surely ■■ succeed.
Yet oh ! ye blooming, soft inclining fair,
Of his too fatal eloquence beware ;
For see, ■ slighted fair one is behind,
With jealous eye and ■■ distracted mind !

February 10, 1786. Sketch of politics in Europe January 24, 1786. Birthday of the King of Prussia. Toasts upon the occasion. ' King of Prussia,' ' King of Great Britain,' ' The Berlin Union,' ' Confusion to the Bavarian Project,' ' The Wooden ■■ of Old England,' ' The Illustrious House of Brunswick and Wolfenbittel,' ' Destruction to the French Interest in Holland, and prosperity ■■ House of Orange,' ' May the British Lion and the Prussian Eagle remain united for times everlasting,' ' May the United strength of the British Lion and the Prussian Eagle preserve the Ancient Constitution of the German Empire, and the Protestant interest,' 'May Universal Monarchy, the bane of Human Nature, for ■■■ remain a baseless vision!' This general view of the political prospects of Europe is pictorially ■■■ forth in the fashion of ■■■ escutcheon, representing the two Protestant monarchs under a pavilion, and seated side by side on ■■■ throne—a Prussian grenadier behind the Great Frederick, and a British sailor behind George the Third. Frederick is holding the double-headed eagle of Austria in golden fetters, with his feet on the motto Universal Monarchy. The names of the various German States, Hanover, Brunswick, Hesse, Saxony, Deuxpont, and Mayence, ■■■ on two shields at the sides of the pavilion. The reigning Duke of Brunswick, and Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, ■■■ standing ■■■ either side of the monarchs in the centre, ■■■ supporters, with their hands on their swords; both ■■■ declaring to 'the twin Protestant heroes,' 'When you agree, I am ready.' The neighbouring States ■■■ variously symbolised. The Prince of Orange is praying for protection; Holland is figured ■■■ a milch cow, of which France is monopolising the produce; and above, ■■■ monkey, with the Crown and Insignia of France, has perched on the globe, and is pointing his claw to Holland. Busts of the reigning monarchs are ranged around. Denmark 'lays by' for the present; Sweden is 'in the pay of France;' Portugal is crying, 'Oh! buy my wine;' Spain wants 'the Rock;' Sardinia is declaring, 'You shall not settle without me!' The Polish Bear, who is announcing that he 'is ■■■ muzzled,' is standing between Russia and the Sultan of Turkey; the latter is hurling defiance at Catherine, 'By the great prophet thou art but a ■■■!' Russia, as ■■■ crowned beast of prey, is 'tortured by ambition, and backed by Brother Joseph.'

March 6, 1786. La Nigligé. Designed by 'Simplex Mundities.' Published by S. W. Fores.

March 7, 1786. Captain Epilogue, published by E. Jackson, 14 Marylebone Street.—The macaroni editor's portrait, as described in the previous print (October 25, 1785), with the addition of a notice-board, introduced above the post which points To the Wells.—A Prospectus for the 'World and Fashionable Advertiser.'

March 7, 1786. An Ordnance Dream, or Planning of Fortifications, published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.—The Duke of Richmond—who, perhaps in some degree on account of his partial French extraction, and his left-handed Stuart descent, did not enjoy unmixed popularity, ■■■ constantly brought into ridicule, with which the satirists ■■■ ■■■ abortive fortification schemes, and ■■■ certain gun, of his own construction, reputed of leather, which it ■■■ said ■■■ was anxious ■■■ introduce.

The caricaturist has represented the distinguished Master-General of Ordnance, an insipid edition of Uncle Toby, as the Duke frequently nick-named. The Duke is in his study, fast asleep in his arm-chair, surrounded by his novel experiments. His foot is resting on the 'Trial of Colonel Debbeig.' A of fresh ammunition, in the form of tobacco pipes, is lying by his side, and a number of rolled up plans of the projected fortifications are thrown about the place. On the walls are a pair of views on the subject of the proposed fortifications; one picture represents the bare ground, with labourers and wheel-barrows, and the skeletons of a projected fleet, the second view gives the fortifications under the state of their imaginary completion, furnished with guns and ammunition, and duly manned, with a bulwark of wooden walls beyond. The solid and assuring conditions of the preparations on paper are badly sustained in practice. A pile of card-houses, disposed round the study-table, do duty for fortresses; broken pipe-bowls and stems take the place of stoneworks and guns. An empty decanter accounts for the Duke's faith in this imaginary system of protection. A is clawing at the table-cloth, and threatening the total destruction of the projected defences at swoop; she is mounted on the muzzle of a sample gun of the problematical leathern ordnance, of which, asserted, the Duke of Richmond had ordered a snuff-box maker to supply him patterns. In the struggles in Parliament, where the Duke's plans the subject of vexed discussion, was laid his political apostasy than upon the inefficiency of his propositions, patriotism in the senate being subordinated ■ all times ■ the workings of party, and the intrigues for political power.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT, OR PLANNING

1786.

MISERY.

March 7, 1786. Luxury—Misery. Published by E. Jackson, 14 Marylebone Street, Golden Square.—The luxury of ■ breakfast in bed on downy pillows, surrounded by all the allurements of ■■■ and other superfluities, is contrasted with the Misery of perishing of starvation and thirst on the wide ocean, with nothing but a ■■■ between the frozen unfortunates and a watery grave, and no object of relief on the bare horizon ■ suggest a ray of hope ■ the solitary sufferers.
VOL. I. B B

March 8, 1786. The Morning Dram. Published by J. Phillips, 164 Piccadilly.—The toilette of a lady whose ■■■ are, to say the least of them, slightly inclined ■ the social glass; while her French hair-dresser is attending ■ her luxuriant locks, the fair, free and easy divinity is not too ethereal ■ decline recruiting her spirits with a cordial.

THE MORNING DRAM

March 1786. The Polish dwarf (Count Boruwloski) performing before the Grand Seigneur. Published by E. Jackson, 14, Marylebone Street.

The famous Count Boruwloski visited nearly all the courts of Europe, where he was made the ■■■ of on account of his remarkable diminutiveness, ■ the age of twenty his height was but two feet four inches. This Polish miniature ■ differed from dwarfs in general, as his figure ■ well-proportioned, and he further possessed perfect breeding, was intellectual, good-natured, and accomplished, and, among other gifts, enjoyed a talent for music, which he had cultivated. His memoirs, written by himself, first appeared in 1788; he lived ■ the advanced age of ninety-eight, he was born ■ Chaliez, in Russian Poland, November 1739; he died ■ Banks' Cottage, ■ Durham (the gift, it ■ said, of some of the prebendaries of Durham Cathedral), September 13. 1837.

The artist, who had ■ opportunity of studying this duodecimo edition of humanity from the life, has represented Count Boruwloski in the ■ of favouring that mysterious potentate, the Grand Seigneur, with ■ ■ on the violin, within the sacred and unapproachable precincts (as far ■ mankind is concerned) of the harem. The contrast presented between this perfect miniature and the full-blown and highly developed beauties of the seraglio, the overfed Grand Turk, and his gigantic guards, ■ ludicrously marked.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ (COUNT BORUWLOSKI) ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

April 1, 1786. The Dying Patient, or the Doctor's Last Fee. Published by H. Brookes, Coventry Street.

1786. Brewer's Drays. Published by E. Jackson, 14, Marylebone Street, Golden Square.—An unusually careful sketch—for Rowlandson—of the interior of the premises of ■ certain great brewer, most probably those of the renowned Mr. Whitbread, in Chiswell Street, visited in ■ by their gracious Majesties about ■ period, when the Royal condescension ■ made the subject of the famous ode by Peter Pindar—

Full of ■■■ of brewing beer,
 The monarch heard ■ W■■■■ fame ;
 Quoth he ■■■ queen : ' My dear, my dear,
 ■■■ got ■ marvellous great ■■■
 Charly, ■ must, must, must ■ Whitbread brew
 Rich as us, Charly, richer than a Jew.
 Shame ! shame ! we have not yet his brewhouse seen !
 Thus sweetly ■ the king unto the queen.
 Now ■ the king for other beers inquire,
 For Calvert's, Jordan's, Thrale's entire ;

BREWER'S DRAYS.

And after talking of these different beers,
 Asked Whitbread if ■ porter equalled theirs—
 A kind of question to the Man of Cask
 That ■ Solomon himself would ask.

1786. Contrasts: Youth and Age.—An exceedingly witch-like looking elderly female is endeavouring ■ entertain ■ young beauty with some piece of ■■■ from ■ paper, ■ which the maiden, it appears, is ■■■ indolently indifferent.

1786 (?). Sailors Carousing.—A bacchanalian scene, picturing the diversions of salts ■ shore in the days when tars indulged in such jocularities ■ frying gold watches, and eating one-pound Bank Notes ■ bread and butter. The 'Pollies from Portsmouth' have evidently exceeded the bonds of strict moderation in their applications ■ the punch-bowl. A Dutch skipper ■ calmly smoking and drinking himself into philosophic stupidity, regardless of the uproar proceeding around him, of singing, shouting, and fiddling, in drunken discordance.

CONTRASTS—YOUTH AND AGE.

1786 (?). The Return from Sport.—A bold and well-executed etching, to which a further interest is added by Rowlandson's easy and flowing touch, of a rustic subject in Morland's ■■■■■ The results of the morning's sport ■ chiefly remarkable for their ludicrous insignificance.

SAILORS CAROUSING.

May, 1786. A Theatrical Chymist.—We have already seen the genius of Holman, who was, ■ we have noticed, at school with the Caricaturist, rising like the sun ■ represented by Rowlandson's pencil and graver: ■ ■ ■ the satirist giving his alliance to the other side, although the former print, Topham endeavouring with his squirt ■ extinguish the rising genius of Holman, was being reissued. Probably the ■ ■ ■ on one side induced the artist—who, ■ presume, sought only ■ exercise his art, and ■ ■ not inconvenienced by party prejudices—

THE ■ ■ ■ FROM ■ ■ ■

■ try and make ■ fair a counter-hit as ■ ■ often find him doing. The figure of Holman, a mean and by ■ means imposing looking personage, is issuing from a still, together with a discharge of 'puffs,' &c. The Theatrical Chymist is a clerical-looking worthy, ■ old friend Parson Bate, who is employing ■ decayed military buck, in tattered regimentals, seated ■ a pile of paper, ■ fan the furnace Academy with the Morning Post bellows; the materials, from which the actor Holman is being distilled, ■ ■ Ignorance, Impertinence, Coxcomity, Misconception, Raving, Ranting, Grinning, Snarling, Tortured Attitudes, Envy, Detraction.

1786. A Box-Lobby Hero. The Branded Bully, ■ the Ass stripp'd of the Lion's Skin.—The incident which forms the subject of this plate is now forgotten, but it appears some overgrown and swaggering personage had constituted himself the tyrant of the box lobbies. The old fable of the Ass in the Lion's skin ■ verified. Although ■ head and a half taller than any of those present, the Branded Bully is allowing ■ mere dwarf to pull his ■ pigtail, and kick him. The ladies ■ jeering ■ the discomfitted swaggerer, who, it seems, ■ in such abject fear that he ■ suffering all ■ of indignities without attempting ■ them.

May 6, 1786. More of Werter. The Separation. Charlotte preserved from destruction by Albert and Hymen, whilst Werter in the excess of frenzy puts ■ end to his existence. Designed by Collings, etched by Rowlandson, published by E. Jackson, Marylebone Street.—The last ■ of Werter's tragedy is represented as taking place ■ the brink of ■ precipice. The adolescent divinity Hymen, in whose path flow- ■ are strewn, ■ conducting Charlotte away from the fate which is hanging ■ her lover; Hymen's torch is interposed between them, and his hand ■ on the matrimonial chain by which

GARDEN THEATRE

Charlotte is bound ■ her faithful husband, about whose head ■ ■ vision of antlers. Charlotte is hurried off in despair. As to the hero of the story, he is writhing about in ■ passionate paroxysm, ■ serpent is stinging him, ■ death's head looms above his own, the suicide is grasping a pistol in each hand, and ■ devil with a scourge of snakes and ■ vial of poison, is pouring the fatal potion over his head like Macassar oil, of which his locks, like a Turk's head broom, standing bolt on end with excitement, do not appear to have any need.

July 20, 1786. Covent Garden Theatre. Published by H. Brookes, Coventry Street.—An interior of the old theatre filled on all sides with ■ diversified and appreciative audience. The etching is made with a bold free point, and from its ■ ■ and simplicity bears the closest resemblance possible to the artist's original outlines, drawn with his famous reed pen, in the facile exercise of which Rowlandson attained peculiar excellence.

September 1, 1786. Outré Compliments.

October 1, 1786. The Fovial Crew. Published by S. W. Fores, 3, Piccadilly.—This print, which is somewhat suggestive of Rowlandson's manner, has evidently lost much in the engraving, which is due to another hand. The group consists of a brace of jolly mariners—probably intended for captain and mate—whose characteristics ■ ■ somewhat of the Dutch skipper type, in company with ■ black sailor, who is holding ■ punch-bowl, and is seated ■ a coil of rope ■ the deck of the vessel.

1786. A Visit to the Uncle. Published by E. Jackson, Marylebone Street. (See 1794.)

A Visit to the Aunt. Published by E. Jackson, Marylebone Street. (See 1794.)

1786. The Wood Eater (Fox). (See December 20, 1788.)

Illustrations to poems by Peter Pindar, 1786–92. Printed for G. Kearsley ■ the Johnson's Head, 46, Fleet Street.

Peter's Prophecy, or the President and Poet ;

OR AN IMPORTANT EPITILE TO SIR JOSEPH BANKS ON THE APPROACHING ■ ■ ■ OF A PRESIDENT ■ THE ■ ■ ■ SOCIETY.

BY PETER PINDAR.

The Banquet Scene : ■ Repast of the Acclimative Order.

SIR J. BANKS (loquitur).

Zounds ! ha'nt I swallow'd raw flesh like ■ hound ?
On vilest reptiles rung the changes round ?
Eat every filthy insect you ■ mention ;
Tarts made of grasshoppers, my own invention ?
Frogs, tadpoles by the spoonful, long-tail'd imps,
And munch'd cockchafers just like prawns ■ shrimps ?

Hell seize the pack! unconscionable dogs!
 Snakes, spiders, beetles, chaffers, tadpoles, frogs,
 All swallow'd to display what man can do—
 And must the villains ■■■ have something new?
 Tell, then, each pretty President creator—
 Confound him—that ■■ eat ■■ alligator.

PICTURESQUE BEAUTIES OF BOSWELL.

'Part the First, containing ten prints, designed and etched by two capital artists' (Collings and Rowlandson). 'Published in May, 1786, by E. Jackson, 14 Marylebone Street, Golden Square.

'To any serious criticism ■■ ludicrous banter to which my journal may be liable, I shall ■■■ object, but receive both the ■■■ and the other with perfect good humour.'—Vide Boswell's Letter in the Public Advertiser of March 10, 1786.

1. Frontispiece.—Representing General Paoli, Dr. Johnson, and the Journalist practising his celebrated imitations.

Ursa Major and the General are drawing the elated advocate in ■ go-cart, which bears his initial, with a fool's cap worn over an advocate's wig. The Journalist has bells ■ his Scotch bonnet, a pen behind his ear, a portrait of Bruce, his reputed ancestor, round his neck, a rattle in his hand, while his publications, Journal to the Hebrides, and Corsica, are by his side; he is indulging his famous imitation of a 'Moo, oah' cow (see plate 10, vol. ii). 'All hail, Dalblair! Hail to thee, Laird of Auckinleck.'—Vide Journal, p. 38.

2. The Journalist, with a view of Auckinleck or the Land of Stones.

Bozzy is shown strutting with his short legs very wide apart, posed for the heroic, with ■ plaid blowing over his shoulder, a feather in his bonnet, an ink-bottle at his button-hole, and an advocate's wig and bands: ■ bulky manuscript, 'Materials for the Life of Samuel Johnson, L.L.D.' is serving as his buckler, and the Journal is flourished as a claymore. Ogden ■ Prayer is in his pocket.

'I am, I flatter myself, completely a "Citizen of the World." In my travels through Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Corsica, France, I have ■■■ felt myself from home; and I sincerely love every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation'—(p. 11).

'My great-grandfather, the husband of Countess Veronica, ■■ Alexander, Earl of Kincardine. From him the blood of Bruce flows in my veins; of such ancestry who would ■■ be proud, and glad to seize a fair opportunity ■ let ■■ known?'—Vide Journal, p. 16.

3. Y ■■ Embrace ■■ Boyd's Inn.

'On Saturday, August 14, 1773, late in the evening I received ■ ■■■ from Dr. Johnson that he ■■■ arrived at Boyd's Inn ■ the head of the Cannongate; ■ went ■ him directly. He embraced me cordially, and I exulted in the thought that I now actually had him in Caledonia.'—Vide Journal, p. 12.

4. Walking up the High Street, Edinburgh.

'Dr. Johnson and I walked ■ in arm up the High Street ■ my house in James's Court. It ■ a dusky night, I could not prevent his being assailed by the evening effluvia of Edinburgh.

'As ■ marched along he grumbled in my ear, "I smell you in the dark." '—Vide Journal, p. 13.

5. Tea at the Journalist's House in James's Court.

'My wife had tea ready for him, which it is well known he delighted to drink ■ all hours, particularly when sitting up late. He showed much complacency that the mistress of the house ■ ■ attentive to his singular habit, and ■ ■ ■ could be more polite when he chose to be so, his address ■ her ■ ■ most courteous and engaging, and his conversation soon charmed her into a forgetfulness of his external appearance.'—Vide Journal, p. 14.

6. Chatting 'till two o'clock in the Morning.

'We talked of murder, and of the ancient trial by duel. We sat till ■ ■ two in the morning, having chatted a good while after my wife left us. She had insisted that, to show all respect to the sage, she would give up our ■ ■ bed- ■ ■ to him, and take a yorse. This I cannot but gratefully mention as one of a thousand obligations which I owe her since that great obligation of her being pleased to accept of me ■ her husband.'—Vide Journal, p. 15.

7. Veronica, ■ Breakfast Conversation.

'Dr. Johnson ■ ■ pleased with my daughter Veronica, then a child about four months old. She had the appearance of listening to him. His motions seemed to her to be intended for her amusement, and when he stopped she fluttered, and made a little infantine noise, and ■ kind of signal for him to begin again. She would be held close to him, which was a proof, from simple nature, that his figure ■ ■ not horrid. Her fondness for him endeared her still ■ ■ to me, and I declared she should have five hundred pounds of additional fortune.'—Vide Journal, p. 17.

8. Wit and Wisdom making preparations for dinner.

'We gave him as good ■ dinner as we could. Our Scotch wild-fowl ■ ■ grouse were then abundant, and quite in season; and ■ far as wisdom and wit ■ ■ be aided by administering agreeable sensations to the palate, my wife took ■ ■ that our great guest should not be deficient.'—Vide Journal, p. 123.

9. Setting out from Edinburgh on the Tour.

'Wednesday, August 18. On this day we set out from Edinburgh, attended only by my man, Joseph Ritter, a Bohemian, ■ fine stately fellow, above six feet high, who had been over ■ great part of Europe, and spoke many languages.

He ■■■ the best servant I ever saw. Let not my readers disdain his introduction, for Doctor Johnson gave him this character: "Sir, he is ■ civil man, and ■ wise man." My wife did not seem quite easy when we left her, but away we went.—Vide Journal, p. 47.

10. Scottifying the Palate at Leith.

'I bought some speldings, fish salted and dried in ■ particular manner, being dipped in the sea and dried in the sun, and eaten by the Scots by way of relish. He had never ■■■ them, though they ■■ sold in London. I insisted on

SCOTTIFYING THE PALATE AT LEITH.

Scottifying his palate, but he was very reluctant. With difficulty I prevailed with him. He did not like it.—Vide Journal, p. 50.

I ■■ thee stuffing, with ■ hand uncouth,
An old dry'd whiting in thy Johnson's mouth;
And, lo! I see, with all his might and main,
Thy Johnson spit the whiting out again.—PETER PINDAR.

Second Volume. Same title as the first part.

He owned he had spoken ■■■ in passion, and that he would ■■■ have done what he had threatened, and added, "Let's think ■■■ on't."—Boswell: "Well, then, sir, I shall be easy. Remember, I am to have fair warning in ■■■ of any quarrel. You are never to spring ■ mine upon ■■■ It ■■■ absurd in me to believe you." Johnson: "You deserved about as much as ■ believe me from night ■ morning."—Vide Journal, p. 164.

6. Highland Dance ■■■ top of Dun-Can.

'Old Mr. Malcolm McCleod, who had obligingly promised to accompany me, was ■ my bedside between five and six. I sprang up immediately, and he and I, attended by the two other gentlemen, traversed the country during the whole of this day. Though ■ had passed over not less than four-and-twenty miles of very rugged ground, and had a Highland dance ■ the top of Dun-Can, the highest mountain in the island, we returned in the evening ■■ all fatigued, and piqued ourselves ■ not being outdone ■ the nightly ball by ■ less active friends who had remained at home.'—Vide Journal, p. 192.

7. The Recovery, after ■■■■ drunken frolic at Corrichatachin.

'I awaked ■ noon, with ■ severe headache; I ■ much vexed I should have been guilty of such ■ riot, and afraid of ■ reproof from Dr. Johnson. About ■ he came into my room and accosted me, "What, drunk yet!"; When I ■ I went into Dr. Johnson's room, and taking up Mrs. McKinnon's Prayer-book, I opened it at the twentieth Sunday after Trinity, in the Epistle for which I read: "And be not drunken with wine, wherein there is excess." Some would have taken this as a divine interposition.'—Vide Journal p. 318.

At Corrichatachin's, the Lord knows how,
I ■ thee, Bozzy, drunk ■ David's sow,
And begging, with rais'd eyes and lengthen'd chin,
Heav'n not ■ damn thee for the deadly sin.

PETER PINDAR'S Epistle.

8. Sailing among the Hebrides,—the Journalist holding ■ rope's-end.

'As I ■ them all busy doing something, I asked Col with much earnest- ■■ what I could do. He with ■ happy readiness put into my hand ■ rope which was fixed ■ the top of ■■ of the masts, and told ■■ hold it till he bid ■ pull. If I had considered the matter I might have ■■ that this could not be of the least service, but his object ■■ keep ■ out of the way of those who ■■ busy working the vessel, and ■ the same time ■ divert my fear by employing ■■ and making me think that I was of ■■ Thus did I stand firm ■ my post, while the wind and the rain beat upon me, always expecting ■ call to pull my rope.'—Vide Journal, p. 349.

■ The Contest ■ Aucklinleck, ■■■■ Ursa Major made ■■■■ retort on the Journalist's father.

'The contest began whilst my father was showing him his collection of medals; and Oliver Cromwell's coin unfortunately introduced Charles the First and Toryism; in the course of their altercation Whiggism and Presbyterianism, Toryism and Episcopacy, were terribly buffeted.

'They became exceedingly warm and violent, and I was very much distressed ■ being present ■ such an altercation between ■ men, both of whom I revered; yet I durst not interfere. It would certainly be very unbecoming in ■ ■ exhibit my honoured father and my respected friend ■ intellectual gladiators for the entertainment of the public; and therefore I suppress what would, I daresay, make an interesting ■ in this dramatic sketch—this account of the transit of Johnson over the Caledonian hemisphere.'—Vide Journal, p. 482.

10. Imitations at Drury Lane Theatre by the Journalist.

'At Mr. Tyler's I happened to tell that one evening, a great many years ago, when Dr. Hugh Blair and I were sitting together in the pit of Drury Lane playhouse, in a wild freak of youthful extravagance I entertained the house prodigiously by imitating the lowing of a cow. I ■ so successful in this boyish frolic that the universal cry of the galleries was, "Encore the cow! Encore the cow!" In the pride of my heart I attempted imitations of some other animals, but with very inferior effect. My reverend friend, anxious for my fame, with an air of the utmost gravity and earnestness addressed me thus: "My dear sir, I would confine myself to the cow!"

'A little while after I had told this story I differed from Dr. Johnson, I suppose too confidently, upon ■ point which I now forget. He did ■ spare ■ "Nay, sir (said he), if you cannot talk better as ■ man, I'd have you bellow like ■ cow."'

1787.

THE authorship of the following pair of prints is doubtful ; they present many indications of Rowlandson's manner, and they were issued by his publisher, S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly ; they are sometimes ascribed to Gillray :—

January 1, 1787. A pair of single figures, respectively described ■ London Refinement and Country Simplicity. As the titles sufficiently indicate, the former sets forth a town 'macaroni' dressed in the height of the mode, and the latter represents ■ pretty youth, of rustic fashion, long-haired, and clad in picturesque and homely country garb.

January 11, 1787. Uncle George and Black Dick at their New Game of Naval Shuttlecock.—From this caricature it seems that the conduct of the Admiralty in 1787 gave reasonable grounds for dissatisfaction. The state of things is pictorially set forth by Rowlandson. In the centre of the picture stand the compound heads of the Admiralty, a single figure with two fronts—those of the King and Lord Howe, who was popularly designated 'The Prince of Duskey Bay.'

A bevy of admirals are applying to the King for recognition of their services to their country ; they are all partially disabled by the loss of limbs. A petitioner is offering a statement of their situation to the King, who is made to declare, 'I ■ interfere with your First Lord ; no, never ;' while the second head of this Janus, Howe, in replying to a petition from sundry aggrieved captains, is dismissing the applicants with "Go, go ! I ■ do nothing ; it is his Majesty's pleasure that——' The abused admirals ■ expressing their wrongs : 'I ■ I shall lose my rank after all my long services !' 'I am ■ aside, although I've lost ■ and ■ eye !' 'Humbug'd, by Jove, by ye old Jesuit !' 'Had I my arm again, to find ■ better country !' 'Brothers, our Lords and Commons will not suffer this game !'

The captains have evidently ■ bad opinion of their First Lord, Vultus est Index Animi : 'Our navy has now two heads and no helm ; rare work !' 'Rascal !' 'The King's pleasure ! That's ■ falsity added to ■ mean finesse !' 'He's fond of ■ if ever ■ bad ; you know him !'

THE LOUSIAD.

For Peter nat'ral 'tis to speak
In rhyme, as 'tis for pigs to squeak.

PETER PINDAR TO THE READER.

Gentle Reader,—It is necessary to inform thee that his Majesty actually discovered, some time ago, he had a louse on his plate. The emotion occasioned by the unexpected appearance of such a guest may be better imagined than described.

An edict was in consequence, passed for shaving the cooks, scullions, &c., and the unfortunate louse condemned to die.

Such is the foundation of the Lousiad: with what degree of merit the poem is executed, the uncritical as well as the critical reader will decide.

The ingenious author, who ought to be allowed to know somewhat of the matter, hath been heard privately to declare, that in his opinion the Batrachomymachia of Homer, the Sacchia Rapita of Tassoni, the Lutrin of Boileau, the Dispensary of Garth, the Rape of the Lock of Pope, are not to be compared to it,—and to exclaim at the same time, with the modest author—

Cedite, scriptores Romani; cedite, Graeci—Nil ortum in terris, Lousiadd, melius.

Which, for the sake of the mere English reader, is thus beautifully translated:—

*Roman and Grecian authors, great and small,
The author of the Lousiad beats you all.*

What dire emotions shook the monarch's soul!
Just like two billiard-balls his eyes 'gan roll.
'How, how—what, what? . . . what's that, what's that?' he cries
With rapid accent and with staring eyes.
'Look there! look there!—what's got into my house?
A louse, God bless us! Louse, louse, louse, louse, louse.'
The Queen look'd down, and then exclaimed, 'Good la!'
And with a smile the dappled stranger saw.
Each Princess strain'd her lovely neck to see
And, with another smile, exclaimed, 'Good me!'
'Good la! good me!' 'Is that all you can say?'
(Our gracious monarch cry'd, with huge dismay).
'What! what a silly, vacant smile takes place
Upon your Majesty's children's face,
That vile louse (soon, unjointed!)
Affronts the presence of the Lord's anointed!'
Dash'd, dash'd hell's most deadly sins,
The Queen and Princesses drew in their chins,
Look'd prim, and gave each exclamation o'er,
And, prudent damsels, 'word spake more.'
Sweet maids! theauteous of Britain's isle,
Speak—those peerless lips forbid smile?

Lips! ■■■ the soul of simple Nature moves—
 Form'd by the beauteous hands of all the Loves :
 Lips of delight! unstained by satire's gall!
 Lips! that I ■■■ kiss'd—and ■■■ shall.
 Now ■ each trembling page, ■ poor mute mouse,
 The pious monarch cry'd, 'Is ■■■ your louse?'
 'Ah! Sire,' replied each page, with pig-like whine,
 'An't please, your Majesty, ■ is not mine.'
 'Not thine?' the hasty monarch cry'd again—
 'What, what? Who's, who's, then? Who the devil's, then?'

'IS THIS YOUR LOUSE?'

Now ■ this sad event the sovereign, ■
 Unhappy, could not take a mouthful more;
 ■■■ wiser Queen, her gracious stomach studying,
 Stuck ■■■ devoutly to the beef and pudding;
 For Germans ■ a very hearty sort,
 Whether begot ■ hog-styes or ■ court,
 Who bear (which shows their hearts ■ ■ of stone)
 The ills of others better ■ their ■ Grim ■■■ seiz'd ■ ■ of ■ the ■
 Of different sizes and of ■■ ages;
 Frighten'd about their pensions or their bones,
 They ■ each other gap'd, like Jacob's sons.

Now to a [redacted] but which we can't determine,
 The growling monarch gave the plate and vermin :
 ' Watch well that blackguard animal,' he cries,
 ' That, soon or late, to glut my vengeance, dies !
 Watch, like a cat, that vile marauding louse,
 Or George shall play the devil in the house.
 Some spirit whispers, that to cooks I owe
 The precious visitor that crawls below.
 Yes, yes ! the whisp'ring spirit tells [redacted] true,
 And soon shall vengeance [redacted] their locks pursue.
 Cooks, scourers, scullions, too, with tails of pig,
 Shall lose their coxcomb curls, and [redacted] a wig.'
 Thus roar'd the King—not Hercules so big ;
 And all the palace echo'd, ' Wear a wig !'
 Fear, like [redacted] ague, struck the pale-nos'd cooks,
 And dash'd the beef and [redacted] from their looks,
 Whilst from each cheek the [redacted] withdrew its red,
 And pity blubbered o'er each menac'd head.

But, lo ! the great cook-major comes ! his eyes
 Fierce as the redd'ning flame that roasts and fries ;
 His cheeks like bladders [redacted] high passion glowing,
 Or like [redacted] Dutch trumpeter's when blowing.
 A neat white apron [redacted] huge corpse embrac'd,
 Tied by two comely strings about his waist ;
 An apron that he purchas'd [redacted] his riches,
 To guard from hostile [redacted] his velvet breeches.
 ' Ye [redacted] of dripping, on your major look !
 (In sounds of deep-ton'd thunder cry'd the cook),
 I swear this head disdains to lose its locks ;
 And those that do not, tell them they are blocks.
 Whose head, my cooks, such vile disgrace endures !
 Will it be yours, or yours, or yours, or yours ?
 Then may the charming perquisite of grease
 The [redacted] of your pocket ne'er increase ;
 Grease ! that [redacted] frequently hath brought you coin,
 From veal, pork, mutton, and the great sirloin.
 O brothers of the spit ! be firm as rocks—
 Lo ! to [redacted] King on earth I yield these locks.
 Few are my hairs behind, by age endear'd !
 But, few [redacted] many, they [redacted] be shear'd.

Sooner shall ham from fowl and turkey part,
 And stuffing leave a calf's or bullock's heart :
 Sooner shall toasted cheese take leave of mustard,
 And from the codlin tart be torn the custard.
 Sooner these hands the glorious haunch [redacted] spoil,
 And all [redacted] melted butter turn to oil !

Sooner ■■■ pious King, with pious face,
 Sit down ■ dinner without saying grace ;
 And every night salvation-pray'rs put forth
 For Portland, Fox, Burke, Sheridan, and North.
 Sooner ■■■ fashion order frogs and snails,
 And dishclouts stick eternal to ■■ tails !
 Let George view ministers with surly looks—
 Abuse 'em, ■■■ 'em—but ■■■ his cooks !'
 'What ! lose ■■ locks !' reply'd the roasting crew,
 'To barbers yield 'em ?—Damme if ■■ do !
 ■■ shav'd like foreign dogs, ■■ daily meets,
 ■■■ and blue, and shiv'ring in the streets ?
 And from the palace be asham'd to range,
 For fear the world should think ■■ had the mange ?'
 'Rouse, Opposition !' roar'd ■ tipsy cook,
 With ■■■ akimbo and bubonic look.
 'Be shav'd !' a scullion loud began ■■ bellow—
 Loud ■■ ■ parish bull, or poor Othello.
 'Be shav'd like pigs !' rejoin'd the scullion's mate,
 His dishclout shaking, and his pot-crown'd pate—
 'What barber dares it, let him watch his nose
 And, curse me !—dread the rage of these ten focs.'
 'Be shav'd !' ■■ understrapper turnbroche cry'd,
 In all the foaming energy of pride—
 'Zounds ! let us take His Majesty in hand !
 The king shall find he lives ■■ our command.
 Yes—let him know, with ■■ his wond'rous state,
 His teeth and stomach on our wills shall wait.
 ■■ rule the platters, we command the spit,
 And George shall have his ■■■ when ■■ think ■■ ;
 Stay till ourselves shall condescend to eat,
 And then, if ■■ think proper, have his meat.'
 'Heav'ns !' cry'd a woman, with much learning grac'd,
 In books as well as meat ■■■ of taste—
 'However modern Kings may cooks despise,
Warriors and Kings ■■■ cooks, ■■ hist'ry lies.
 Patroclus broil'd beef-steaks to quell his hunger ;
 The mighty Agamemnon potted conger !
 And Charles of Sweden, 'midst his guns and drums,
 Spread ■■ own bread and butter with ■■ thumbs.
 ■■ shav'd !—No ! Sooner pill'ries, jails, the stocks
 ■■■ pinch this corpse, than barbers snatch my locks.'

Around the table, all with sulky looks,
 Like culprits doom'd ■■ Tyburn, sat the cooks.
 At length, with phiz ■■■ show'd the ■■ of ■■■
 The sorrowing king of spits and stew-pans rose ;

With outstretch'd hands and energetic
 He fearless thus harangues the roasting race !
 'Cooks, scullions—hear me, every mother's son—
 Know I relish this royal fun.
 What's life,' the major said, 'my brethren, pray,
 If force snatch our first delights away ?
 Relentless, shall the royal mandate drag
 The hairs that long have grac'd silken bag ?—
 Hairs ■ ■ barber scarcely worth a fig—
 Too few to make a foretop for a wig !

'COOKS, ■■■■■■■■■■ ME, ■■■■■ MOTHER'S SON.'

Hairs, look, my lads, ■ wonderfully thin
 Old Schwellenberg has more upon her chin !'

'—What ! what ! not shave 'em, shave 'em, shave 'em, shave 'em ?
 Not all the world, not ■ ■ world shall ■ 'em.
 I'll shear 'em, shear 'em, as I shear my sheep !'
 Thus spoke the mighty monarch in ■ sleep :
 Which proves that kings in sleep a speech may make,
 Equal ■ what they ■ ■ awake.

Now did the major hum a tune so sad !
 Chromatic—in ■ robes ■ sorrow clad ;

But, lo! ■■■■■ fear control,
 Nor exorcise the barbers from his soul
 And now his lifted eyes the ceiling sought;
 And ■■■■ he whistled—not for ■■■■ of thought.

Scarce had he utter'd when a noise was heard;
 And now, behold, a motley band appear'd!
 With Babel sounds at once the kitchen rings,
 Of groom, page, barber, and the best of Kings.

'AND ■■■■ SOUGHT,
 AND ■■■■ THOUGHT'

And lo! the best of Queens must see the fun;
 And lo! the Princesses ■■ beautiful ■■,
 And ■■■■ Schwellenberg ■■■■ hobbling, too—
 Poor lady, losing in the race ■ shoe!
 But, in revenge-pursuit, the loss how slight!
 The world would lose ■ leg to please ■ spite
 And now for peace did Secker bawl aloud,
 And lo, ■■■■ came at once among the crowd.

In courts of justice thus, to hush the hum,
 ' Silence ! ' the crier calls, ■■■ all is ■■■
 ' Cooks, scullions, all, of high and low degree, ■■■■ learn our monarch's will from ■■■
 Our sovereign lord, the King, whose word ■ fate,
 Wills in his wisdom to see shav'd each pate :
 Then, gentlemen, pray take your chairs ■ once !
 And let each barber fall upon his scone.'
 Thus thunder'd Secker, with a Mars-like face,
 And struck dire terror through the roasting race.
 Thus roar'd Achilles, 'mid the martial fray,
 When ev'ry frightened Trojan ■■ away.
 Calm ■■ the crowd when thus the King of isles,
 Firm for the shave, but yet with kingly smiles :
 ' You must be shav'd—you shall—you must, indeed.
 No, no—I shan't let slip ■ single head.
 A very filthy, nasty, dirty trick :
 The thought on't turns my stomach—makes me sick.
 Louse, louse—a nasty thing—a louse I hate :
 No, no—I'll have ■■ more upon my plate.
 One is sufficient—yes, yes—quite ■ store :
 I'll have ■■ more—no more—I'll have ■■ more.'
 Thus spake the King, ■■ ev'ry King who gives
 To trifles lustre that for ever lives.
 Thus stinking vapours ■■■ ■■ oozy pool,
 Of cats and kittens, dogs ■■ puppies full,
 Bright sol sublimes, and gives them golden wings,
 The cloud ■■ which ■■■ say the cherub sings.

PETER'S PENSION.

A ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ A ■■■■ ■■■■

Non possum tecum vivere, ■■ sine te.

Nebuchadnezzar, sir, the King,
 As sacred hist'ries sweetly sing,
 Was on all fours turn'd out to grass,
 Just like a horse, or mule, or ■■■
 Heav'ns ! what ■ fall from kingly glory !
 I hope it will not so turn out
 That ■■ shall have (to make a pout)
 A second part of the old story !

This pension ■■ well meant, O glorious King !
 And for the bard ■ very pretty thing ;
 But let me, sir, refuse it, I implore !
 I ought not ■ be rich whilst you are poor.

No, sir, I cannot ■ your humble hack ;
 ■ fear your Majesty would break my back.

A great deal, my dear liege, depends
 On having clever bards for friends.
 What had Achilles been without his Homer ?
 A tailor, woollen-draper, or ■ comber !
 In poetry's rich grass how virtues thrive !
 Some when put in, ■ lean, ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ alive,
 And yet ■ speedily ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ obtain,
 That e'en their ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ know them not again.

PETER'S PENSION.

Could you, indeed, have gain'd my ■ ■ ■ of fire,
 Great would your luck have been, indeed, great sire !
 Then had I prais'd your nobleness of spirit !
 Then had I boasted that myself,
Hight Peter, ■ ■ ■ the first blest, tuneful elf
 You ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ a farthing to for merit.

Though money be a pretty handy tool ;
 Of mammon, lo ! I scorn to be the fool !
 ■ ■ ■ fortune calls she's welcome to my cot,
 Whether she leaves a guinea or a groat ;
 ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ she brings me from ■ ■ ■ butcher's shop
 The whole sheep ■ ■ ■ single chop.

For lo I like Andrew Marvel I can dine,
 And deem ■ mutton bone extremely fine.
 Then, sir, how difficult ■■ task you see,
 To bribe ■ moderate gentleman like ■■
 I will not swear, point blank, I shall not alter—
 A saint (my namesake) e'en ■■ known to falter.

And who is there that may not change his mind ?
 Where can you folks of that description find
 Who will not sell their souls for cash ?
 That most angelic, diabolic trash !
 E'en grave divines submit to glitt'ring gold !
 The best of consciences are bought and sold :
 Yet should I imitate the fickle wind,
 Or Mister Patriot Eden—change my mind ;
 And for the bard your Majesty should send,
 And say, ' Well, well, well, well, my tuneful friend,
 I long, I long ■ give you something, Peter—
 You make fine verses—nothing ■■ be sweeter—
 What will you have ? what, what ? speak out, speak out :
 Yes, yes, you something want, no doubt, ■ doubt.'

Then would the poet thankfully reply,
 With falt'ring voice, low bow, and marv'ling eye
 All meekness ! such a simple, dove-like thing !
 'Blest ■■ the bard who verses can indite,
 To yield a second ■■■■ delight !
 Thrice blest, who findeth favour with the King !

' Since 'tis the royal will to give the bard
 In whom the King delighteth ■■■■ reward,
 Some mark of royal bounty to requite him,
 O King ! do anything but knight him.'

ODES FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Know, reader, that the laureate's post sublime
 Is destin'd to record, ■ handsome rhyme,
 The deeds of British monarchs twice a year :
 ■ great, how happy is the tuneful tongue !
 If pitiful, ■■ Shakespeare says, the song
 Must 'suckle fools and chronicle small beer.'

■■ bards ■■ take the ■■ hill with the down ;
 Kings cannot always oracles be hatching :

Maggots ■■■ tenants of a crown—

Therefore, like those ■ cheese, not worth ■ catching.

O gentle reader ! if, by God's good grace,
Or (what's more sought) good interest ■ court,
Thou get'st of lyric trumpeter the place,
And hundreds are, like gudgeons, gaping for't ;
Hear ! (at ■ palace if thou mean'st to thrive)
And, of ■ steady coachman, learn to drive.

■■■ FOR THE NEW YEAR

Whene'er employ'd to celebrate ■ King,
Let fancy lend thy ■ her loftiest wing—
Stun with thy minstrelsy th' affrighted sphere ;
■ thy voice thunder ■ ■ hundred batteries,
For ■ sounds, conveying ■ flatteries,
Are zephyrs whisp'ring ■ ■ royal ■

Know, glutton-like, on praise each monarch crams,
Hot spices suit alone their pamp'erd nature :
Alas ! ■ stomach, parch'd by burning drams,
With mad-dog ■ at simple ■

Fierce ■ each royal ■■■■ for applause ;
 And, as ■ horse-pond wide, are monarch's ■■■■
 Form'd, therefore, on a pretty ample scale :
 To sound ■ ■■■■ panegyric note,
 To pour ■ ■■■■ flatt'ries down their throat,
 Were off'ring shrimps for dinner ■ ■ whale.

And mind ! whene'er thou strik'st the lyre ■ kings,
 To touch ■ Abigails of court the strings ;
 Give ■ Queen's toad-eater ■ handsome sop,

THE ■■■■ OF ■■■■

And ■■■■ she always has more grace
 Than e'en ■ sell the meanest place—
 Swear, too, the woman keeps ■ title-shop.

Thus, reader, ends the prologue to my odes !
 The true-bred courtiers wonder whilst I preach—
 And with grave vizards and stretch'd eyes to gods,
 Pronounce my sermon a most impious speech :
 With all my spirit—let them damn my lays—
 A courtier's ■■■■ are ■■■■ praise.

January, 1787. The Triumph of Sentiment.

January, 1787. The Triumph of Hypocrisy.

1787. Transplanting of Teeth. by J. Harris, 37 Dean Street, Soho.—Among the schemes of charlatans, which were popularly successful in the days of The Temples of Health, Mud Baths, and other devices by which pretenders flourished, the gains extorted from fashionable credulity, the end of the last century, was the theory of dentistry, according to the practice of which a sound tooth was to be torn from the jaws of a healthy individual, and, while still warm, was to be inserted in the gums of a patient whose decayed molar had been extracted simultaneously, and the result of the operation was left to nature. According to the caricaturist, who has produced a large, spirited, and well-executed plate on this novel operation, we are informed by advertisement that this truly extraordinary performance is taking place in the surgery of 'Baron Ron, Dentist to her High Mightyness the Empress of Russia.' The professor has appended to this important announcement the further statement, 'Most money given for Live Teeth.'

The dual operations of depriving the poor of their sound teeth for a small pecuniary consideration, that their lost molars may regarnish gums of patients who prepared pay for the accommodation, and the substitution of whole teeth for decayed ones, proceeding once. The artist has sketched wretched young creatures, in rags, who stealing out of Baron Ron's surgery, weeping and bewailing the loss of their teeth, and regarding a coin held in the palm of their hands, with mourning and reproachful looks. An old dandy, a military buck, examining the adjustment of his teeth, which do appear fit as accurately as could be desired. An assistant dental professor is planting a live tooth in the gums of a lady of quality, who is kicking violently, in disapproval of the sensation. An elderly dowager is seated in suspense in a chair beside a young sweep, whose odoriferous vicinity she is counteracting by applications of a scent-bottle held to her susceptible while the Baron—a modishly costumed foreigner—is tearing out a beautiful healthy white tooth from the jaws of the sooty patient, to be straightway transplanted into the gums of the lady of quality.

THE HORSE.

May 1787. The Brain-Sucker, or The Miseries of Authorship.

In 1787 Rowlandson issued a series of rustic sketches, including such subjects as horses, dogs, coaches, carts, haymakers, cottages, farrier's forges, and roadside inns; similar views to those selected by Morland, but in Rowlandson's own original style.

Among these rural studies may particularise:—

A BREWER'S DRAY.

A POSTING INN.

Shoeing: Village Forge. Published by Laurie and Whittle, 53 Fleet Street.

A Brewer's Dray.

A Posting Inn. Republished July 1, 1803.

A Rural Halt. Published by J. Harris, Dean Street, Soho.

A RURAL HALT

HAYMAKERS.

■ SAILOR'S FAMILY

■ SCENE, ■ ■ FRUITLESS ATTEMPT ON THE ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

Haymakers. Published by J. Harris, Dean Street, Soho.

1787. A Post Chaise.

1787. A Sailor's Family.—One of those charming pieces to which ■ much of Rowlandson's reputation is justly due. Unaffected simplicity, an easy effortless style of drawing, natural grouping, and the ■ perfect felicity in rendering graceful attitudes and depicting faces, unequalled for ■ certain innocent beauty and expressiveness.

August 1, 1787. A College Scene, ■ ■ Fruitless Attempt on the Purse of old Square-toes. Engraved by E. Williams, published by J. R. Smith, King Street, Covent Garden.—Old Square-toes has called ■ ■ his scapegrace—

■ the subject of supplies, it is needless ■ particularise. Young Hopeful, who is obviously destined for the Bar—where, ■ may feel convinced in advance he is bound ■ shine—has assumed his ■ specious deportment, and has donned his cap and gown, with the other semblances of decorum. The title, Fruitless Attempt, ■ somewhat of a misnomer, for the special pleading of young Hopeful ■ evidently producing a favourable impression. Old Square-toes ■ banged himself down into a chair, and planted his stick ■ the ground with an air of determination, in a very square attitude, ■ demonstrate that ■ resolution ■ not ■ be shaken, and ■ young Hopeful ■ losing his pains ; but,

COMEDY SPECTATORS.

IN KAS.

as in the old comedies, the paternal heart is yearning towards his progeny, while his ■■■■ relentless denunciations ■■■■ thundered forth; the lines of his ■■■■ face ■■■■ relaxing, ■■■■ amused smile is twitching ■■■■ the ■■■■ of ■■■■ mouth, and ■■■■ are convinced that the next remark will embody the sentiment immortalised by the Georgian dramatists. 'You dog, this time your father forgives you, boys will be boys; I was ■■■■ gay young spark myself once, I'll pay your debts this time, but ■■■■ again, &c. &c.'

■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ SCALING

October 18, 1787. Tragedy Spectators. Comedy Spectators. Published by T. Rowlandson, 50 Poland Street.—The contrast of the respective attractions between the ■■■■ classes of entertainment is pictured with the artist's characteristic force and spirit. The humour of these two designs is suggestive of Hogarth's genius. While the woes of 'Romeo and Juliet' ■■■■ influencing the spectators ■■■■ the most profound melancholy, and reducing the audience ■■■■ and hysteria, the attendants ■■■■ Comedy are enjoying the humours of the performance with the ■■■■ frank and unrestrained merriment.

1787. Love ■■■ East.—Oriental luxuriousness ■■■ to have ■■■ a charm for Rowlandson's pencil. It ■ true that the ■■■ of the East ■■■ represented, at the caricaturist's day, with the strictest adherence ■ facts; their salient points have since been made ■■■ familiar by the graphic pictures of our travelled artists, for whom the East has always had ■ peculiar fascination.

Rowlandson's fancy has supplied those details which he could ■ furnish from actual experience, and ■ far as the general theories of oriental splendour

MODISH.

■■■ concerned, the imaginative delineations of ■■■ artist will be found far ■■■ realistic and in accordance with our preconceived impressions than ■■■ actuality.

November 5, 1787. Reformation, or the Wonderful Effects of ■ Proclamation.—The Chapel Royal is apparently the ■■■ of this subject. King George, Queen Charlotte, ■■■ a Lord and Lady-in-waiting, are in the Royal pew; ■■■ them are the law Lords; the Prince of Wales and Mrs. Fitzherbert, with Col. George Hanger, ■■■ in the centre; Burke is between them, with Lord North, who ■ of represented as sleeping soundly, in spite of the efforts made by a pretty maiden to awaken him. Pitt is acting as clerk. The [redacted] is evidently one of no [redacted] significance. Fox is standing in a sheet, with a placard, 'For playing cards on the Lord's Day!' A stout lady, armed with a whip, is driving a pack of dogs out of the chapel.

1787(?). The Art of Scaling.

1787(?). Modish. Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly.

1787(?). Prudent. Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly.

1787. Landscape and other Etchings, by T. Rowlandson.

1787. Embarking from Brighthelmstone to Dieppe.—The spectators are scattered about the shore, with various fishing smacks; the passengers are being pushed off in rowing boats and the sailing lugger, which is to take them and their luggage across the Channel. There is a fresh breeze blowing; the whole view is animated, and complete in picture.

1787. A Sea-coast Scene. Cottages by the Sea-shore: a Storm coming on.

1787. Deer-Hunting: ■ Landscape Scene.—A noble park is capitally etched; the subject is diversified by the introduction of ■ stag hunt. The hunters ■■ riding up as the stag, followed by the pack of hounds, is taking the water.

December 18, 1787. A Travelling Knife-grinder at ■ Cottage Door. Published by T. Rowlandson, Poland Street.—A pretty rustic scene, etched with spirit and well finished.

The Three Horse-shoes—A roadside inn.

1787. View on the French Coast.—Partially dismantled ships of war, canted for caulking.

1787. Fox-Hunting: a Landscape Scene.—The artist has taken great pains with the trees and rich foliage which grace this view. The pack have ■■■■ up with the fox, and the huntsmen ■■■ in 'at the death.'

October 15, 1787. Stage Coach setting out from ■ Posting House.

1787. Cribbage Players.—A lady and gentleman ■■ opponents; ■ second lady and gentleman ■■ watching the respective hands. Etched in a brilliant outline, probably intended to be coloured in facsimile of an original drawing.

December 15, 1787. Postboys and Post-horses at the White Hart Inn.—Published by J. Harris.

1787. Boy bringing round ■ Citizen's Curricie,

1787. Civility.

1788.

1788. The Morning of the Meet.—One of a series of large hunting pictures, somewhat in the style of Morland, especially as respects subject, but treated with Rowlandson's individuality as regards boldness, spirited action, and

There are five successive subjects which may be considered to form part of this series, respectively entitled The Meet, The Start, The Run, In at the Death, and The Dinner.

February 20, 1788. The Humours of St. Giles's. Published by T. Harmar (Engraver), 161 Piccadilly. The honours of this plate are, understand, divided between Rowlandson and Ramberg. The Humours of St. Giles's are of a diversified nature, might be supposed. Both artist and engraver have seized the passing incidents with true Hogarth-like aptitude, and collected them in a group. There is nothing but the evidence of Rowlandson's peculiarities to warrant in including this print among his works. It is very scarce, and we have not met with his on any copy of the plate, which is engraved by T. Harmar, the publisher, after a method bearing some resemblance, as far as mechanical execution is concerned, to the early style of James Gillray. We believe the etching is due to Ramberg, but the female figures, and the person of the hairdresser, unmistakably characteristic of our artist's manner, both expressions and attitudes, and particularly regards the drawing of the extremities.

A 'gin alum' is the centre of attraction; the sign of the 'Fox and Grapes' the landlord is serving a buxom and somewhat dishevelled Irish beauty with a glass of 'blue ruin.' A drunken-looking butcher is standing treat; another fair member of the hundreds of Drury is entirely overcome, and is a 'deadly lively' illustration of the usual advertisements traditionally found outside the spirit cellars of Hogarth's period: 'dead drunk for a penny, clean straw for nothing.' A dandified French barber, returning from the mansions of his clients in St. James's, with his powdering-bag and paraphernalia under his arm, is stooping, from a motive of gallantry, the semi-conscious nymph, while an urchin is possessing himself of the tonsor's handkerchief. A baker, taking home ready-cooked joints ■ the respective owners, ■ pausing awhile ■ enjoy the farces transacting around him, while the lamplighter, perched on ■ ■ above ■ attend his lamps, is pouring some of ■ oil ■ the baked ■ by way of ■ In the distance is shown an altercation between a milk-maid and a fish-fag, and a bout of fisticuffs ■ proceeding farther ■

THE HUMOURS OF
ST. GILAS'S

March 6, 1788. The Q. A. loaded with the Spoils of ■ and Britain.—

The Q. A. is a zebra; Pitt is seated, with well-stuffed panniers, in front of ■ novel steed, loaded with costly spoils, Rights and Wrongs; round ■ Zebra's neck ■ a bag of Bulse, containing ■ of Warren Hasting's famous ill-gotten diamonds. Pitt ■ sharply whipping his beast, and declaring 'I have thrown off the mask, I can blind the people ■ longer, and ■ carry everything by my bought majority.' The Q. A. is also trumpeting forth, 'What are children's rights ■ ambition? I will rule in spite of them, if I ■ conceal things ■ Q.' A law lord, said ■ be intended for Lord Thurlow, who has hold of the animal's head, ■ filled with certain gloomy apprehensions: 'So many Scotchmen have left their heads behind in this d—d town for treason, I begin ■ tremble ■ much ■ the thief in the rear for my own.' The thief in the ■ is the Duke of Richmond, who, with one of his famous defence guns between his legs, is assisting Pitt's advance with ■ goad, and crying 'Skulking in the rear, out of sight, suits ■ my character.' A finger-post is pointing ■ Tower Hill, by B—m (Buckingham) House.

March 29, 1788. Ague and Fever. (Companion print to The Hypochondriac, November 5, 1792.) Designed by James Dunthorne. Etched by T. Rowlandson. Published by Thomas Rowlandson, 50 Poland Street.

And feel by turns the bitter change of fierce extremes—
Extremes by change more fierce.—MILTON.

James Dunthorne ■ to have had a ■ for inventing symbolical renderings of human infirmities; in the present case the two conditions of Ague and Fever are ■ least ingeniously portrayed. The cold snake-like folds of Ague ■ twining round the shivering victim, seated as he is in the full heat of ■ blazing fire; while the quivering heats of Fever personified ■ in attendance, between the patient and his physician, waiting to add his persecutions ■ the infirmities which the sick man ■ already enduring.

July 9, 1788. Going ■ ride St. George; ■ Pantomime Scene lately performed ■ Kensington before their Majesties. Published by William Holland, 50 Oxford Street.—This print, with ■ crowd of others on the ■ incident, had ■ rise in ■ accident; the Prince of Wales, being ■ driving in ■ curricule with Mrs. Fitzherbert, by some misadventure was thrown from ■ vehicle, and ■ companion shared his fall. In Rowlandson's print the Prince has fallen on ■ back, and the lady ■ taking a Phaeton-like flight on ■ his body. The positions ■ reversed in the caricatures Gillray and other satirists produced on the subject. George the Third and his Queen, with ■ escort of Guards, ■ riding past ■ the very moment, and they seem greatly interested in the spectacle of their son's downfall.

ACQUA AND PETER.

July 22, 1788. ■ Cantwell Canvassing for Lord Janus.—The Westminster Election again created further excitement in 1788, ■ the old field on which the Whigs had gained their triumph against Court interest. The appointment of Lord Hood, in the beginning of July, ■ ■ ■ the Admiralty Board rendered ■ ■ election necessary. Hood, as the supporter of Pitt, enjoyed the advantage of the Ministerial assistance; the Opposition, however, contested the ■ ■ efficiently in favour of Lord John Townshend, in the Whig interest, that, in spite of the manoeuvres of the Ministry, the Liberal member was returned.

In Rowlandson's print a Methodistical congregation is being harangued by the pastor on the respective qualities of the candidates. Lord Hood, whose ■ is wearing a look of sanctified horror, is accommodated with a ■ behind his advocate; and a sailor, with a bludgeon and the union-jack unfurled, is also in the pulpit. Old Cantwell has a work in his hand setting forth ■ presentations of Devil Townshend and Saint Hood. The eloquence of the preacher is directed against the failings of his opponents: 'Lord Hood is a saint, my dear brethren, as immaculate ■ ■ newborn babe; but ■ for Lord Townshend, he'll be d——d to all eternity. ■ shudder when I tell you he loves a pretty girl; the Opposition to a man are all fond of pretty girls! They go about like lions in pursuit of your wives and daughters. Lord Hood's pious Committee will ■ to it,' &c.

July 27, 1788. Effects of the Ninth Day's Express from Covent Garden, just arrived ■ Cheltenham.—The King had retired to Cheltenham, where, according ■ the artist, he ■ taking the waters with his family; ■ postilion has arrived express from London with the latest intelligence concerning the election for Westminster. The 'result of the ninth day's poll—majority for Lord John Townshend, 218,' is ■ much for his Majesty, who is quite overcome; he has dropped the tumbler from which he was taking the waters, and has fallen into the ■ of a page; a peasant, who has been drawing the ■ for his sovereign, is, in consternation, deluging the royal shoe with a few quarts of the same fluid; Queen Charlotte ■ horrified, and the pretty Princesses ■ clasping their hands in consternation. In Court circles ■ was represented that the Whigs ■ capable of any atrocity, however deep.

August 1, 1788. The School for Scandal. Published by V. M. Picot, ■ Greek Street, Soho. T. Rowlandson, invt; V. M. Picot, direxit.—One of the long strips containing subjects arranged in series, which were popular at this period, belonging in the same order as The Bath Minuet and The Progress of a Lie, by H. Bunbury; A Country Dance and A Cotillon, by W. H. Kingsbury; The Installation Supper, as given at the Pantheon, by the Knights of the Garter (on May 26, 1788), by James Gillray; The Prince's Bow, by F. G. Byron; English Slavery, or a Picture of the Times, 1788; Chesterfield Travestied, by Collings, &c., &c.

The School for Scandal consists of seventeen females, of ages varying from a tender maid to an antiquated grandmother; the respective characteristics of the different individuals are hit off with Rowlandson's usual spirit and success; the pretty maidens being extremely flattered, and the traits of less favoured dowagers coming in for grotesque exaggerations. The fair members of this coterie were supposed to be making their several comments, and exclamations, upon a recent elopement, proceeding not unusual at the time The School for Scandal was given to the public: 'Off! positively off!' 'I'm thunderstruck!' 'Poor creature, I pity her!' 'And with a low-bred fellow!' 'Did you expect anything else?' 'A footman too!' 'Even so!' 'Mind, it's a secret!' 'Not a syllable!' 'Poor women are, my daughter would not have done so!' 'I! God forbid!' 'Oh! 'tis fashionable life!' 'She vow'd she'd go!' 'So fine a girl! with so good a fortune!' 'I say nothing!' 'An ill-made scoundrel too!' 'He's good enough for her!'

November 25, 1788. Filial Piety. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly. —The King's illness gave serious grounds for apprehension; his chances of recovery became more precarious the Tories thought fit to insinuate that the Prince and his adherents were awaiting the royal dissolution with ill-concealed satisfaction. In Filial Piety we find the King almost at his last gasp; he is stretched on the bed, from which, it was generally concluded, he would never be able to get up; his hand is raised to his head in token of suffering, and he is turning away his face from a spectacle well calculated to disturb the last moments of a pious and suffering parent. The Prince and his friends have just risen from a drunken bout; their spirits have evidently been well sustained; the Heir Apparent is reeling in, with 'Damme, come along; I'll do it if the old fellow's — or not?' Georgey Hanger has come dancing in to support his comrade; under his arm is his Knock-me-down Supple-Jack, and he has a bottle held in readiness for emergencies. Sheridan, who became prominent in this period as the Prince's confidential adviser, is capering and huzzaing. A table is knocked over, and the Sacrament is thrown on the ground; a bishop on his knees, who is offering prayer for the Restoration of Health, is horrified at the scandalous improprieties committed by these boisterous intruders. On the wall is a representation of the Prodigal Son, appropriate to the occasion.

December 26, 1788. The Prospect before us.—Although the satirists took some pains to point out the aspirations of the Whigs, they did ■ conceal their sympathies for the position of the Prince, and the necessity of providing for the security of his interests in the future, as threatened by the Regency restrictions. The Prospect before us, ■ the end of 1788, seemed likely ■ be shortly realised, until the unexpected recovery of the King put ■ end to the hopes and intrigues of both parties. The prospect which threatened the hopes of the Prince and ■ Whig adherents ■ the practical investment of the sovereign power in the hands of the Queen and Pitt, ■ the setting aside of the Prince's influence ■ in name. The ■ is divided; one-half is wavering over the head of Pitt, and the other is suspended ■ the head of the Queen, who is trampling on the coronet and triple plume of the Heir Apparent, 'my son's right.' Queen Charlotte is held by the Minister in leading-strings. Pitt, who had suffered his zeal ■ outrun his discretion, is understood to have made ■ statement, in the heat of debate, which his opponents characterised ■ downright treason; the questionable expression,¹ with some additional colouring, is set down in a written speech which he is displaying in his hand: 'I think myself ■ much entitled to be Regent as the Prince of Wales.' Pitt, under the shelter of the Queen, is declaring: 'Behind this petticoat battery, with the assistance of Uncle Toby (Duke of Richmond), I shall beat down the legal fortifications of this isle and secure the Treasury at the next general election!' Queen Charlotte is holding ■ draft of special Taxes, 1789, by Billy's desire. Petticoats, Blue and Buff Cloth; Devonshire-Brown Silk, Portland Stone, Fox Muffs. The bulky form of Madame Schwellenberg, Mistress of the Robes—the German favourite of the Queen and the popular detestation of the rest of the community—is swaggering along ■ the House of Lords, with the Mace and Purse; she has supplanted Thurlow ■ Lord Chancellor, and is already dictating the policy her mistress is to follow: 'Take care to secure the jewels; I have hitherto been confined to the wardrobe, but ■ mean to preside ■ the Council, and, with Billy's assistance, the name of Schwellenberg shall be trumpeted ■ the remotest corner of Rag Fair.' The Queen is proclaiming herself ■ passive agent: 'I know nothing of the matter. I follow Billy's advice!'

The Treasury gates ■ securely closed; the spectators are declaring that the Premier, Pitt, '■ meddled with a petticoat before;' and Warren Hastings ■ observing with delight that his apprehensions concerning the action of his enemies are at ■ end, and that the influence he had made with the Queen, in the form of gifts of jewels, is now likely to become of service : ' My diamonds will now befriend ■■■ Huzza ! '

¹ The words taken exception to were: 'I say the Prince of Wales has no more right ■ assume the government ■ of the Parliament, who represent ■ people, ■ any ■ person,' &c.

December 1788. The English Address.—To this further satire upon the Regency Restrictions Rowlandson has attached the name of H. Wigstead. Pitt is standing ■■■ platform receiving the congratulations of ■ drove of donkeys. The Prince of Wales, wearing his coronet, plume, and broad riband, ■ held in fetters, ■ powerless victim in the hands of ' the Pitt party.' The Duke of Richmond has secured one end of the chain ; on the reputation of his abortive fortification propositions he declares, while alluding to the lean figure of his leader, ' Billy's virtue is bomb-proof, gentlemen ; he is well fortified in his ■■■ good works.' Both the personal peculiarities of the Prime Minister and his attitude ■■■ well hit off ; he is giving his followers this assurance : ' Gentlemen, I have chained up your Prince ; your enemies may insult him as they please ; he cannot ■■■ it. I expect ■ receive all your thanks for this service I have done your Constitution. Should ■ war break ■■ you have ■■ nobody to defend you—look upon me, gentlemen, as your saviour ; I will only ■■ you a little more, and quarter ■ few more of my needy relations on you, and will then retire to my new office of Treasurer and Secretary, ■ Buckingham House.' For these patriotic services the members of the asinine assembly are duly acknowledging their gratitude.

December 26, 1788. The Political Hydra.—Fox, in this case, enjoys the distinction of having his ■■■ pictorially illustrated in six phases : Out of place, and ■ character ; black-bearded and swarthy, his rugged locks unkempt. In place ; out of character ; his beard shaven, his locks powdered. As he might have been ; crowned with the cap of Liberty. As he would have been ; wearing ■ coronet. As he should have been ; his head severed by the executioner's axe, the punishment awarded traitors. As he will be ; enjoying the supreme power under the Prince of Wales's diadem. This last prophecy was premature, as ■■ soon ■■

December 29, 1788. A Touch on the Times.—Rowlandson has taken his own print of the Times, 1784, and has produced ■ parody upon the ■■ theme. In this case the Prince is again represented as being led to the steps of the throne ; one foot is placed ■■ solid base, the Voice of the People ; the second step, however, Public Safety, is sadly injured ; Virtue, ■ indicated on the throne, is a money-bag ; the coming ruler is making patriotic professions : ' I would do the best ■ please my people.'

Fox ■ leaning ■ the throne ; his figure is intended to personify that of Justice ; a brace of dice-boxes form the new scales of Justice, a bludgeon, topped with ■ eye, ■ the Sword of Justice. Fox is declaring : ' I have the voice of the people in my eye.' Sheridan is playing the part of Liberty ■■ at elbows ; while leading the Prince ■ the throne he ■ picking his pockets. Britannia is showing a cloven foot; Pitt, provided with a huge extinguisher, is stumbling over the British Lion; he is boasting, in reference to the incendiary torches of Envy, Rebellion, &c., which sundry Furies are flourishing around, 'I could soon extinguish these puppet-show vapours, if properly supported.' The City Corporation has its deputies, in the former print; their complaint is, 'We have not been taxed this twelvemonth!' Commerce in this instance is depicted as a dissolute harridan, deep sunk in gin.

December 30, 1788. Sir Jeffery Dunstan Presenting an Address from the Corporation of Garratt.—Pitt is crowned; his throne is not, however, exactly of dignity; his secretary, Dr. Prettyman, Bishop of Lincoln, is holding an Address from Manchester.

Sir Jeffery Dunstan, a poor deformed, half-witted, and 'eccentric character' of the time, has shouldered the civic mace, and is presenting an address from the very ancient and respectable Corporation of Garratt, beginning: 'High and mighty Sir.' Pitt is replying: 'Thanks, thanks, my respectable friend; this is the most delicious cordial I have tasted yet.' Brook Watson, Alderman Wilkes, and others supporting the address. A tomfool, who, a trainbearer, has hold of Sir Jeffery's cloak, is enquiring, 'Did you ever see such grace and dignity in your life, Mr. Alderman?' To which Wilkes is responding, 'Grace—he shall be made Master of the Ceremonies at St. James's!'

December 30, 1788. The Word-Eater. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.

ADVERTISEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.—This is to inform the public that this extraordinary phenomenon is just arrived from the Continent, and exhibits every day during the sittings of the House of Commons before a select company. To give a complete detail of his wonderful talents would far exceed the bounds of an advertisement, indeed they surpass the powers of description. He eats single words and evacuates them so as to have a contrary meaning. For example, the word Treason he can make Reason, and of Reason he can make Treason; he can also eat whole sentences, and will again produce them either with a double, different, or contrary meaning, and is equally capable of performing the same operation on the largest volumes and libraries. He purposes, in the space of a few months, to exhibit in public for the benefit and amusement of the Electors of Westminster, when he will convince his friends of his great skill in this new art, and will provide himself with weighty arguments for his enemies.¹

The hero of this specious advertisement is Fox; he is standing near the Speaker's table, in the House of Commons, where the members are struck with amazement at his dexterity in this novel accomplishment. In one hand the Whig performer is holding out his speech on the Rights of the Prince, and the Explanation of that Speech in the other. 'All these,' he declares, 'I will devour next.' Two important and bulky works are ■ his feet, waiting their turn ■ be devoured—Jus Divinum of Kings and Principles of Toryism. On the table, placed before the 'Word-Eater,' is a provision of considerable substance which will ■ further powers of digestion—Statutes at Large, Magna Charta, Principles of the Constitution, and Rights of the People.

¹ Fox is remembered in 1788 public were flocking to the performances of a word-eater.

December 31, 1788. Blue and Buff Loyalty.—The sympathy openly manifested by the Whig faction for the Prince's prospects of succeeding ■ power ■ satirised ■ the expense of Blue and Buff susceptibilities. Saturday.—The Royal Physician is drawn looking very downcast, with his gold-headed ■ to his lips. 'Doctor: How is your patient to-day?'—'Rather worse, sir.' Blue and Buff Loyalty ■ made ■ exult somewhat indecorously: 'Ha, ha! rare news!' Sunday.—'Doctor: How is your patient to-day?' The physician's face expresses restored confidence: 'Better, thank God!' An expression the ■ of loyal ■ pious is put into the mouths of the disappointed faction.

HOUSEBREAKERS

1788. Housebreakers. Drawn and etched by T. Rowlandson; aquatinted by T. Malton. Republished by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly, August 1, 1791.—

This plate represents the domestic felicity of well-to-do citizens being rudely broken in upon by robbers and threatening assassins.

LOVE ■ ■ ■

A very critical situation for all the ■ ■ ■ concerned. What the next moment may produce it is impossible to conjecture, so much depends upon the first shot ;

it is truly ■ moment of suspense. Whether the horse-pistols of the burglars will miss fire, and the formidable blunderbuss held by the respectable householder will lodge its contents—which would be, seemingly, enough to ■ down a regiment—in the dastardly bodies of the midnight marauders, must remain ■ problem, the solution of which is lost beyond recovery.

1788 Love and Dust.—Cinder-sifters pursuing their grimy avocation ■ where in the outskirts, in the neighbourhoods where the great pyramidal heaps of dust and cinders were to be found in the last century. That romance should soften the front of labour, and that Black Sal and Dusty Bob should lighten the sifting of cinders with ■ mixture of conviviality and flirtation, is but another proof that human ■ is everywhere constituted ■ the ■ susceptible principles—a fact open ■ demonstration. The present print, which, in its way, is about as terrible in its vagabond fidelity and grim humour as anything which Rowlandson has ■ us, ■ been included in the present series, with ■ due sense of editorial responsibility, ■ affording ■ fair instance of ■ caricaturist's talent in Hogarth's realistic walk.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ AND ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

To draw this and similar groups from the life, Rowlandson ■ only ■ ■ ■

■ stroll from Soho ■ the ■■■■ where the Gray's Inn Road now stands. On the ground which Argyle Street, Liverpool Street, and Manchester Street ■ present occupy, in the caricaturist's day ■■ spread 'that sublime, sifted wonder of cockneys, the cloud-kissing dust-heap, which sold for twenty thousand pounds.'

The sum quoted is apocryphal; but it is known that, by some chance, Russia heard of these famous accumulations of dust and cinders—said ■ have been existing ■■ the ■■■■ spot since the Great Fire of London—and, ■ the fallen city of Moscow required rebuilding after Napoleon's famous Russian campaign, the government of the Czar purchased the ■■ piles and shipped them to Moscow.

LUST AND AVARICE.

This estate—the site of the ground on which the dust-heap stood—was purchased by the 'Pandemonium Company' in 1826, for fifteen thousand pounds. The Liverpool Street Theatre was erected, and the surrounding grounds subsequently let ■■ building leases. Beyond the Gray's Inn Road heap—when the Caledonian Road ■■ ■ rural thoroughfare—was the Battle Bridge Estate of some twenty acres, described in the 'New Monthly Magazine' (1833) as 'the grand [redacted] of dustmen, scavengers, horse and dog dealers, knackermen, brick-makers, and other low but necessary professionals.' As Mr. T. C. Noble—the descendant of the original lucky speculator who secured the dustheap, and sixteen dilapidated tenements, [redacted] he relates, for about 500*l.*—communicated [redacted] Pink's History of Clerkenwell, 'the site of the mountain of cinders [redacted] covered by the houses of Derby Street; the [redacted] of the thoroughfares erected [redacted] this [redacted] derived from the popular ministers of that day.'

November 28, 1788. Luxury and Desire. Published by W. Rowlandson,

COACH

49 Broad Street, Bloomsbury.—A battered old hulk—a regular ancient [redacted] modore—is forcing [redacted] well-filled purse on the acceptance of a graceful and well-favoured maiden.

November 29, 1788. Lust and Avarice. Published by W. Rowlandson, 49 Broad Street, Bloomsbury.—A pretty simple-looking girl, dressed in [redacted] countrified garb, [redacted] exacting contributions from a miserly curmudgeon, who it seems is extremely reluctant to part with his money.

December 3, 1788. Stage Coach with Basket: the Dolphin Inn.—Published by William Rowlandson, 49 Broad Street, Bloomsbury.—A scene of bustle and activity, consequent upon the departure of a stage coach from ■ posting-house in ■ flourishing country town. From the business going on in the background it is evidently market-day. The coach ■ taking up its complement of passengers ■ the Dolphin Inn; the landlord of ■ house is civilly doing the honours of his establishment, and conducting a party of arrivals the comforts of hostelry.

AN EPICURE.

1788. An Epicure.—Another Hogarth-like study, but touched with all the knowledge and spirit peculiarly the attributes of Rowlandson. An over-fed gourmand, whose hopes of happiness are evidently centred on perishable things, is exulting, with pantomimic rapture, over a delicacy in the way of fish. (See 1801, republished.)

1788. A Comfortable Nap in a Post-chaise.—A well-fed easy-going pair, reposing in a jogging post-chaise, are soothed into slumber by the motion, and being rattled along oblivious of their surroundings.

1788. A Fencing Match.—Rowlandson was an amateur, as we have noticed, of all manly exercises. In his day riding, boxing,¹ and especially fencing, considered indispensable accomplishments for the man of 'ton.' We have had occasion to allude to our artist's intimacy with Angelo, the fashionable professor of sword exercises, who notices the caricaturist's works with appreciation, and mentions him with the highest personal esteem, in various passages of his memoirs and anecdotes. Rowley executed sketches for his friend Angelo, and he further engraved a series of plates for him, besides a large and interesting view of his fencing-rooms.

A COMFORTABLE NAP IN A POST-CHAISE.

¹ The caricaturist said he be the hero of the sparring roysterer in his unflattering delineation of A Bruce of Blackguards, introducing George Moreland the painter and himself under a situation little complimentary to the softening influences of fine art. The plate given in this work under the title of May 30, 1812, when it was re-issued by the artist, but the original etching properly belongs to a much earlier period, and is probably executed about a quarter of a century anterior.

A FENCING MATCH

THE PEA CART

The present subject, which is particularly excellent as regards grouping and execution, probably represents ■ encounter at Angelo's rooms, either in the West ■ in the City, in both of which parts of town he held establishments. The principal figures, and the personages grouped around the fencers, ■ ■ doubt ■ to designate portraits; but as no evidence has been preserved ■ this date that would assist in ■ than ■ partial identification of ■ ■ two professional celebrities, it is nearly impossible to recognise the major part of the individuals present.

1788. A Print Sale. A Night Auction.—The rooms of ■ old auctioneer, where night sales of pictures, drawings, and prints, ■ held. The auctioneer is seated under ■ candelabra, at his desk, which is placed upon a circle of boards running round the apartment, and forming a trestle for the display of engravings. The customers, connoisseurs, collectors, artists, &c., ■ seated ■ the outside of the circle, and ■ either side of the seller. The sale-clerk, and the men who ■ showing the lots, ■ in the space within the centre.

Contemporary references further describe these 'night auctions,' where the caricaturist's drawings frequently figured, and which Rowlandson occasionally attended, in company with his friends Mitchell the banker, Parsons and Bannister the comedians, Antiquity Smith, Iron-wig Heywood, Calcb Whiteford, and other dilettanti. See page 70.

1788(?). The Pca-cart.

1789.

SEVERAL of the prints included under our description of the political caricatures for 1789 ■■■ confessedly of somewhat doubtful parentage. In ■■■ ■■ two cases, other artists, like Kingsbury, ■■■ entitled to the credit of having a share in the prints we here include with Rowlandson's works.

After carefully examining and comparing the questionable plates with those whose authenticity is certain, we have selected only such examples ■■■ feel convinced ■■■ not altogether out of place in this volume, while we acknowledge a doubt of their precise authenticity. It is the old story of the engraver with ■■■■ than one publisher disguising his handiwork, ■■ Gillray and other caricaturists ■■■ well known to have done, to accommodate rival print-selling firms, without appearing to depart from the loyalty due to their principal employer. In the ■■■ of Gillray, it will be remembered, his allegiance ■■■ enlisted, and in ■■■ special manner than is usual in the relation between artist and publisher, in the interests of the Humphreys. In the instance of Rowlandson, although he did not supply any one firm with his works, to the exclusion of other publishers, ■■ the period we ■■■ describing—and before either Mr. Ackermann, of the Strand, took our artist under his protecting care, or Mr. Tegg, of Cheapside, began to pour his cheaper caricatures into the market—it will be recognised that Rowlandson's best prints were issued by Mr. S. W. Fores, of Piccadilly. He occasionally, when ■■ popular subject gave unusual impulse to the demand for satirical plates, supplied Mr. W. Holland of Oxford Street with his etchings, slightly varying his style as far as the manipulative portion of the engraving was concerned, but retaining all the more special features of his identity. Indeed it is doubtful if he sought to disguise his handiwork in the sense adopted by Gillray, who did not hesitate, it has been said, to produce inferior piracies, executed by his own hand, with intentional clumsiness and apparently defective skill, after his ■■■■ masterpieces, to accommodate caricature-sellers who wished ■■ secure his works otherwise than through the legitimate channel of his ■■■ publishers, who ■■■ known to have been both respectable and liberal in their dealings with this wayward and unscrupulous genius.

January 1, 1789. The Vice Q——'s Delivery at the Old Soldier's Hospital

in Dublin.—Published in Dublin; republished by W. Holland, 50 Oxford Street.—This print alludes to a certain interesting event. The Lord Lieutenant's lady has apparently been confined in a ward of the Soldier's Hospital, Dublin. One old veteran, who is nursing the bold young stranger, is declaring: 'Deel, my saul, but he'll be a brave soldier.' The distinguished parent is responding: 'Thanks, thanks, my brave sergeant, you shall be knighted this day.' Soldier's porridge is supplied, a substitute for caudle. An invalided warrior is inclined to quarrel with this proceeding: 'Downright robbery, by St. Patrick! We'll be famished if our broth is to be stole from us in this manner.'

January 8, 1789. The modern Egbert, or the King of Kings.—The Prince of Wales is pictured in the position of Egbert when towed by kings on the river. The vexed question of the 'Regency Restrictions' is still the difficulty of the situation. His Royal Highness is held captive; his hands and feet bound in golden chains. The of the Stork and Anchor, hung out upon Pitt's barge, placed above the Royal Standard of England. The modern Egbert, while passing St. Stephen's, is declaring, in reference to his fettered condition, 'I feel not for myself but for my country.' Pitt, wearing the dress in which he is usually represented—the Windsor uniform—and with an imperial diadem placed upon his head, is acting as steersman to his barge, which carries a huge flag inscribed with his arms, and the words 'Devil take right, P. IV.' The young statesman is encouraging his crew to 'pull together, boys!' The four oarsmen are all crowned as kings. Thurlow the Thunderer, with his diadem perched above his chancellor's wig, is acting as stroke, and pulling away vengeance: 'Damme, I've got precedence of the young lion!' The Marquis of Buckingham is asserting, 'I'll for the Shillalagh without authority!' Dundas is rowing with a long golden spoon; he is declaring, 'The prince shall remember old Nemo Impune;' and the Duke of Richmond, with one of his famous guns as oar, is promising 'We'll show him Gallic faith!'

1789. The Pittfall.—The chance of catching the Crown—in the print a kind of ignis fatuus, has lured Pitt and the parliamentary allies (who supported his for 'restricting the powers of the Regent') to the brink of destruction. The Pittfall is nothing less than the infernal regions, pictorially set forth in smoke, and a great deal of flame, with fantastic devils, furies and pitchforks, all seething together. Pitt is making a flying leap to seize the Crown, which is fluttering above his reach: 'I'll have thee perish in the attempt, for my ambition knows no bounds!' The leading demon is prepared with a barbed prong, to receive the Minister in his descent below, while offering Pitt the comforting, 'You will be elected Regent in dominions nem. con.' The Duke of Richmond has overstepped the margin, and is plunging headlong into the clutches of his tormentors. 'Spare me this time,' he cries; adding, with a liberality little likely to be appreciated in the quarter to which it is addressed, 'and you shall have coal in future without duty.' A friend is assuring the Duke, in allusion to his left-handed descent from Charles the Second, 'All your great grandfather's w——s are waiting dinner for you!'

Thurlow is hurling to the flitting diadem with the Chancellor's ■■■■■ He is proclaiming his resolution with a strong asseveration, 'I'll have a knock at it!' The Duke of Grafton also descended, it will be remembered, from the 'Merry Monarch,' is declaring, 'Junius has lamed me, or I'd have a knock at it too!'

January 30, 1789. The Propagation of ■ Truth. H. W. invt. Published by Holland, Oxford Street.—Bunbury's long serial slip, 'The Propagation of ■ Lie,' enjoyed a wide reputation. In the present print Rowlandson, under the suggestion of his friend Wigstead, has turned the social satire to political purposes. The Tory chances seemed utterly forlorn to the time of the King's illness; indeed, the loss of their offices was only a question of days, until an unexpected change in the royal health cleared off their apprehensions. At the beginning of the year 1789, however, ■■■■ doubted that a week or two would see Fox and the Whigs back in power. In the Propagation of a Truth the members of the threatened Ministry are represented as imparting their personal apprehensions to ■■■■ another confidentially. R——e (Rose), one of the Treasury Secretaries, is rushing in with this gloomy intelligence: 'The people refuse ■ address.' The profane Thurlow is invoking oburgations upon the optics of the public. Pitt is collapsing: 'Then I am done up!' Lord Sidney is declaring: 'It is all dickey with me!' Dundas is stamping with vexation: 'I'll gang to my ■■■■ country, and sell butter and brimstone!' The Duke of Richmond is admitting his fears: 'I begin to smell powder;' and the Duke of Grafton is corroborating his colleague's theory. Lord Chatham, ■ the Admiralty, is asserting: 'I thought myself snug.' Lord Camden confesses, from his experience, 'I should have known better.' Brook Watson, with his wooden leg, is saying: 'I cannot Brook this, I'll hop off!' Grenville, who occupied the Speaker's chair (January 5 to May), does not relish losing his new wig. Old Alderman Wilkes, who had ratted extensively in his time, and who was, at the date of the present caricature, slyly paying his court to both sides simultaneously, is congratulating himself upon the famous squint immortalised by Hogarth: 'I can look either way!' Lord Carmarthen is uncomfortable: 'I've been in anguish all night!'

Both factions of Tories and Whigs alike were satirised alternately. If ■■■■ print ■■■■ severe on the Ministry and their adherents, it ■■■■ certain to be followed in turn by ■■■■ less cutting strictures upon their antagonists of the Opposition.

January 21, 1789. Loose Principles. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.—Fox is represented in his study; the busts of Wat Tyler and Jack Cade ■■■ its ornaments. His book shelves offer 'The Laws of Pharaoh,' 'Political Prints,' 'Life of Oliver Cromwell,' 'Cataline,' 'Memoirs of Sam Housse,' and kindred literature. Fox is plunged in distress; Burke is engaged in ■ certain quest; 'not searching for precedents, but consequences.' Sheridan—whose foot is standing ■ ■ a volume of Congreve's plays, marked 'School for Scandal,' indicating that this comedy ■■■ somewhat of a plagiarism from the works of his predecessor—has charge of the Regent's clyster-pipe, his confidential appointment being that of 'Principal Promoter of Loose Principles.'

January 28, 1789. Suitable Restritions. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.—The Heir Apparent, according to this print, is treated as an infant. A long pinafore, and a child's cap, ■■■ employed to carry out the theory of his puerility. Pitt, in court dress, is making ■■■ of his ward, for he is holding him in leading-strings. Pitt's restrictions effectually prevent the Prince from stooping ■ take up the Crown, which is the subject of ■ new game of ring-tor. The leading Whigs, shown kneeling down at a little distance, are taking part in the sport. Fox is making a shot at the ring, in the centre of which stands the Crown of England: 'My game for a crown!' Sheridan's chief anxiety is for his own interests: 'Knuckle down, and don't funk, Charley.' Burke, who is eager to take his chance, is exclaiming: 'My turn next, Sherry!'

January 30, 1789. Neddy's Black Box, containing what he does not value three skips of a louse. Published by S. W. Fores.—The Prince appears ■ his throne, a full-fledged Regent by anticipation, with all his plumes and paraphernalia. The ex-patriot Burke is kneeling in an attitude of courtier-like servility, and presenting the head of Charles the First, preserved in the Treasury Box: 'My Liege, I told them in the House ■ day so proper to settle the Regency ■ Charles's martyrdom.' Sheridan, who wears the blue and buff uniform like his colleague, is supporting the orator: 'I, too, ■■ for despatch; such days best suit our purpose.' From Sherry's pocket is peeping the pamphlet, 'Horne Tooke's Letter on the Prince's Marriage,' which operated somewhat like a spark in ■ powder magazine at this date. A quotation from Edmund Burke's speech, referring to the day most suitable for the discussion of the Regency Bill, is added at the foot of the plate: 'Why not debate it on Friday? I say it is the only day in the year on which it ought to be debated (Charles's martyrdom), and carried up in the Black Box.'

1789. State Butchers.—In this view of the Prince's situation, the Heir Apparent is pictured ■ the victim of the combinations which Pitt contrived to hinder the Prince's accession to power by vexatious restrictions. The principal figure is that of the future Regent, laid out at length ■ the anatomy table, ready ■ be operated upon by the dissecting knives which his antagonists ■■■ eagerly setting to work. Pitt occupies the chair ■ president of this college of Surgeons; in his left hand is ■ paper, '*Thanks from the City of London with 50,000*l*.*' He is holding a wand in his right hand, with which he is pointing ■ the heart of his subject, beneath the Prince's Star of Brunswick; he is thus directing his head anatomist, Dundas:—'The good qualities of his heart will certainly ruin our plan; therefore cut that out first.' Lord Thurlow, in his Chancellor's robes, is, like Hamlet, musing ■ the head of the fallen prince. Lord Sydney has his knife held ready for a desperate gash. The two Stuart peers ■■ assisting as amateur butchers. The Duke of Grafton has ■ dissecting knife in either hand; at his feet is ■ formidable basket of saws and cutting instruments; his preparations ■■■■ extensive scale, while the Duke of Richmond is prepared ■ resort ■■■■ clumsier methods, since Uncle Toby ■ wielding a heavy executioner's ■■ in readiness to cut in at any signal.

A NEW SITUATION.

February 6, 1789. A New Speaker. Published by H. Holland, Oxford Street.—Addington, the Speaker, is ■ his table. Pitt, standing behind him, has thrust ■ speaking trumpet into his mouth, through which the orator, to the amazement of the other members, is holding forth: 'Eyes has he and sees not, neither ■ there any breath in his mouth, but through the hollow of his head shall the sound of my ■■ voice be exalted, and through the stuttering of his tongue my intentions be more fully explained. Keep together, my good friends, till ■ go out, and you will then probably follow me, but I will work changes for you. See how this rank Tory becomes a good Whig!' The [redacted] is lying [redacted] the table beside the 'City Address, 50,000*l.*; Aldermen Hoppikicky, Squintum, Peter Grievous, &c.,' and [redacted] proposed List of Taxes, which includes such items as Fox-tails, Play (i.e. gambling) Houses &c., fanciful personal enactments levelled against Pitt's great rival.

February 7, 1789. Britannia's Support, or the Conspirators Defeated. Published by H. Holland, Oxford Street.—The Prince, who is looking somewhat ill [redacted] [redacted] under the circumstances, has been attacked by Pitt and his allies, the Stuart dukes. Pitt is aiming an awkward blow at the tutelary divinity and her protégé with [redacted] terrible-looking [redacted]. The Duke of Richmond is firing [redacted] musket; and the Duke of Grafton, [redacted] a midnight assassin, is operating with [redacted] dagger and [redacted] dark lantern. Britannia has taken the Heir Apparent to her arms, and is shielding the menaced Prince with her person.

February 7, 1789. The Hospital for Lunatics.—A companion [redacted] the preceding. The results of the Tory excitement have landed certain sufferers in the Lunatic Asylum. The mad doctor is going his rounds, he is declaring; 'I see no signs of convalescence!' His assistant, following with a few strait-waistcoats for the refractory patients, is supporting the opinion of his chief: 'They must all be in a state of coercion!' Pitt is the first sufferer; he is wearing a coronet of straws, and is waving a sceptre of twigs; over his head is the notice: 'Went mad, supposing himself next heir to a Crown.' In the adjoining cell is the Duke of Richmond, who is buried in the contemplation of toy cannons—'Went mad in the study of fortifications.' Next to him is another victim, 'Driven mad by [redacted] political itching.'

February 7, 1789. Britannia's Support.

February 15, 1789. Going in State to the House of Peers, or [redacted] Piece of English Magnificence; dedicated to Mr. Pitt and his 267 Liberal friends. Published by William Holland, 50 Oxford Street.—This print, with [redacted] [redacted] two others of similar character, have been attributed [redacted] Kingsbury. A careful comparison of these doubtful plates, with the more recognised etchings of both Rowlandson and Kingsbury, has led the writer to the conclusion that several at least of the caricatures published by Holland at this time, owe their existence, at least in part, to the skill of the former, although he has in some degree modified his usual handling.

The Heir Apparent is proceeding in burlesque state to the chamber of Peers. A ragged mob is in attendance. The arms on his carriage [redacted] turned upside down, coachman and footmen [redacted] of the shabbiest, and the slovenly coach is drawn by eight miserable animals, who [redacted] barely crawl, while one of the broken-kneed leaders has actually [redacted] to grief. The Tories have taken their places

■ certain windows to view the procession. The Duke of Orleans (who ■ ■ visit to this country), or the French Ambassador, is amazed at such ■ dowdy spectacle; next to his window is Lord Amherst. The Stuart-Dukes of Richmond and Grafton, sharing ■ window, are agreeing that the Prince's turn-out is 'Well enough for any of the Brunswick race;' they have put up at the sign of the 'Lion in the Tails.' The Marquis of Carmarthen is saying, 'Very pretty indeed;' he is ■ the sign of 'The Restrictions' (a picture of the Prince in the pillory is on the signboard); his neighbour Pitt is declaring the show to be 'a very magnificent spectacle, upon my honour.' Lords Hood and Chatham, at the sign of 'The Chatham and Hood,' ■ frigate labouring in a storm being the signboard, ■ on the look-out: 'The great naval review was nothing to it.' Lord Chatham is assuring his companion that the show is 'infinitely superior ■ my father's funeral.' Lord Thurlow is asseverating with an oath, 'It eclipses all that has been ■ ■ in Rome!'

March 6, 1789. A Sweating for Opposition, by Dr. Willis Dominisweaty and Co. Published by S. W. Fores.—The health of the King, according to the reports of his physicians, began to improve from this date. It ■ hinted rather broadly that this intelligence ■ ■ so agreeable to the Opposition as they might desire. The print sets forth the ■ treatment by which the growing consequence of the Whigs ■ to be reduced. The several patients are placed in small furnaces, with a blazing fire below each; the doctors ■ attending to the stoking with ■ will. Burke is becoming quite limp in the process: 'I have got no juice left.' Fox is becoming furious; he is gesticulating and shouting, 'I have sweated enough.' Sheridan is venomous: 'This is scandalous; the Bailiffs (Bailiffs) have sufficiently sweated me!' The Prince, in an agony, is crying: 'I suppose they call this a Regency sweat.' A lady next to him is declaring: 'I sweat with desire.' Weltjé, the Prince's house-steward and head cook—a ■ who enjoyed considerable reputation in spite of the satirists—is asserting: 'I never sweat ■ much at cooking in my life.' Mrs. Fitzherbert, who is separated from her admirer, is highly indignant: 'I sweat with jealousy; what disregard to the marriage right!'

March 10, 1789. Edward the Black Prince receiving Homage. Published by William Holland, 50 Oxford Street.—Thurlow, in his Chancellor's robes, is assuming the sovereign position; he has the crown and sceptre; Adam, wearing his counsellor's gown, has come to 'kiss hands.' According to the print the black-browed Thunderer is blessed with the hairy paws of a bear, not omitting the claws. On the wall, in the background, is a picture of Blood stealing the Crown.

March 7, 1789. The Irish Ambassadors Extraordinary. A gallantee Show. Published by S. W. Fores.—The six members of the so-called Irish Embassy ■ galloping up to the colonnades of Carlton House, each mounted ■ a jibbing

Irish bull ; the riders have their faces to the tails, by which they have taken hold in order to secure their seats. The Marquis of Lothian and the Duke of Leinster ■■ urging the deputation forward. It is understood they have arrived somewhat late. The holder of the address is declaring : 'Aye, aye, the Marquis of Buckingham will remember ■■ when I go back again.' The other deputies are making pertinent observations : 'The folks stare at us ■■ they would at wild beastises !' 'What ■ nice errand is this ; make him Regent whether or no !' 'I say, my friend, we shall be there the day before the fair !' 'Well ! yes, I dare say well ! why, he ■■ so bad he could say nothing but "What, what, what," when we left Dublin !' 'What, ■ occasion for a Regent ? then ■■ will go back again and tell the lads ■■ all mad, and, by the powers, 'tis my opinion ■■ are ■■ for nothing at all, at all !' The cook of the Pall Mall Ordinary is thrusting his stout body out of ■ window opposite Carlton House and declaring : 'Begar, I must go prepare ■■ sourkraut for dese wild bullocks !'

March 15, 1789. Irish Ambassadors Extraordinary !!! In a few days will ■ published the Return of the Ambassadors.—The memorable six are mounted ■ their prancing bulls, with a sack of potatoes behind each for a saddle, and as provisions for the journey ; all ■ armed with bludgeons. The delegates ■ headed by ■ personage with ■ crozier and ■ mitre, a sort of episcopal leader, who is exhorting his followers to 'Make haste, my honies !' The Duke of Leinster is flourishing his shillalagh : 'No restrictions, by the Holy Cross of St. Patrick !' Others are crying : 'How our Majority will astonish the young King !' Some doubt ■■ their minds ■ to his Majesty's possible restoration to health : 'My dear, I ■■ told that he was recovering fast !' 'No ! as mad as a hatter !'

Press Notices. March 2, 1789. Address from the Parliament of Ireland to the Prince of Wales. (Morning Herald).—'We have, however, the consolation of reflecting, that this ■■ calamity hath not been visited upon ■ until the virtues of your Royal Highness have been ■ matured ■ to enable your Royal Highness to discharge the duties of an important trust, for the performance whereof the eyes of all his Majesty's subjects of both kingdoms ■ directed to your Royal Highness.'

March 4, 1789. Irish Embassy Uniform. (World).—The great open pocket ■ either side is this : When the Duke of Leinster ■■ coming, he wrote indefinitely ■ have a new coat. 'I would not be in his coat for something,' said Lord Robert Fitzgerald pleasantly, when he heard of the mischievous folly. But wishing to do the best he could for his brother, he ordered him the Constitutional uniform of Blue and Orange. This, of course, the Duke, when he came, would not wear ; and ■■ clothes being hastily wanted, Jennings and Headington, the tailors, ■■ left at liberty, and they made the GREAT ■■ POCKET ■ either side !

March 19, 1789. Ireland—by Express: The Six Amazing Bulls. (World.)—'The proprietor of these unruly animals begs leave, through the channel of the World, to return his grateful thanks for the great encouragement Mr. GRATTAN'S Bulls met with in London, and most particularly from their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York.

'He is sorry to say that upon the road these animals grew very unruly. The completely horned [redacted] four times beaten, for taking what did not belong to him; and the little bull, called 'my lord,' who had but a stump of a tail, had that cut off by a wicked boy for his diversion.

'The other four all tumbled into the water, [redacted] they landed at Dublin, and looked so ill, when they were driven into Mr. Grattan's stable, "that he wished [redacted] heaven he had never sent them over!"

'The proprietor has likewise to add, that they were [redacted] well fed by the kindness of the gentlemen in London, that they do not again take kindly [redacted] Irish potatoes. He hopes, however, by beating them regularly every day, he shall drive [redacted] into them.

'The collection for seeing these amazing animals upon the road was very handsome. Since their arrival here, the Lord-Lieutenant has had an offer of them for sale, and very cheap; but he thought they had been so "hawked about," by being up at public show in London, he would have nothing to do with them. So the bulls [redacted] where they were—with the proprietor.'

March 9, 1789. The Answer to the Irish Ambassadors. (Morning Chronicle).

Your duty to the King is great,
As all mankind must see;
And, though you're [redacted] a day too late,
You're welcome still [redacted]

You'll guess what want of speech conceals,
As Irishmen should do;
You'll guess my understanding feels,
My heart remembers, too.

You take a different line, I see,
From England and oppose her;
But well I know you disagree
To make the Union closer.

As to the rest of your Address,
I know not what to do;
I fear 'tis treason to say Yes,
I'm loth to answer No.

Should he relapse, indeed, [redacted] might Accept the Irish sway;
But that [redacted] learn to-night,
So [redacted] another day.

March 2, 1789. The Prince's Answer to the Address of the Deputation from Ireland. (Morning Herald).—"If, in conveying my grateful sentiments on their conduct, in relation to the King, my father, and to the inseparable interests of the two kingdoms, I find it impossible adequately [redacted] express my feelings [redacted] what relates to myself, I trust you will not be the less disposed [redacted] believe that I have an understanding to comprehend the value of what they have done, ■ heart that ■ remember, and principles that will not suffer me ■ abuse their confidence.

“ But the fortunate change which has taken place in the circumstances which gave occasion ■ the Address agreed to by the Lords and Commons of Ireland induces me for ■ few days to delay giving ■ final ■ ; trusting that the joyful event of his Majesty's resuming the personal exercise of his Royal authority may then render it only necessary for me to repeat those sentiments of gratitude and affection for the loyal and generous people of Ireland which I feel indelibly imprinted ■ my heart.”

‘ The Prince of Wales has conducted himself in this delicate point with the circumspection and propriety that has marked the whole of his conduct in the late melancholy and critical circumstances. He called to his aid the first legal ability in the kingdom ; and on the subject of the answer to the Irish Address had ■ conference of several hours with the Lord Chancellor and Lord Loughborough.’

March 16, 1789. The Ambassadors' Extraordinary Return, on Bulls without Horns. Published by S. W. Fores.—The same personages ■ ■ caricatured on the previous plate are represented in the sequel returning to Dublin. They have exchanged their famous Irish bulls for donkeys ; their potatoes have gone, but they are liberally provided with Regency Cakes in their place. Their Pope, whose donkey's head is ornamented with the plume of three feathers as borne by the Prince of Wales, is received by an eager deputation ■ his arrival : ‘ What news, what news ? The tidings tell. Make haste and tell ■ all ; say why are they thus mounted ? Is the Regent ■ and all ? ’ The leader is replying : ‘ I'll tell you all in no time. Why, you ■ know the King is better than the Regent—that is all ! ’ The Marquis of Lothian is declaring, ‘ Master Walgee (Weltjé) made ■ such Regent's and Regency cakes ! ’ The Duke of Leinster is crying, ‘ Aye, my lads, Dr. Willis has done the King over, and the Regent won't take it ! ’ Other members of the deputation ■ remarking, ‘ The English lads ■ ■ merry, by my shoul, they ■ always a-laughing at us ! ’ ‘ Ambassadors Extraordinary, by St. Patrick, but I've forgot what we have done ! ’ ‘ Done ? Why carried the address, and brought it back again, with all these cakes. A deal better than potatoes ! ’

April 4, 1789. The Rochester Address, or the Corporation going to Eat Roast Pork and Oysters with the Regent.—The procession of the Corporation of Rochester is headed by the Mayor (Matthews), who is holding the Address ■ the end of ■ pole ; he proposes to send the Regent ‘ some chips.’ The rest of this train, professional ■ and traders of Rochester, ■ promising to favour the heir to the throne with their specialities. Alderman Spice will ‘ assist him with long sixes.' Alderman Thompson will favour him with his Preventative; another, ■ brewer, will send him 'some Chatham Butt;' Prentice professes ■ 'give him thirteen ■ the dozen, and all sour;' another member of the Corporation, ■ barber by trade, ■ proposing to 'shave him.' Sparks, ■ lawyer, ■ declaring, 'I'll beg ■ speak to Sherry for his business, bailing, actions, demands, writs of error; that is, if he'll promise to see me paid!' Bristow is guaranteeing 'he shall never be tried by the Court of Conscience.' Robinson is asserting, 'These are your right sort; none of your quack;' and Alderman Nicholson, who ■ bringing up the rear, with a brick and trowel, is looking forward to the job 'of making him ■ fortifications!'

April 22, 1789. The Grand Procession to St. Paul's ■ St. George's Day, 1789: an exact view of the Lord Mayor carrying the City Sword, larchheaded, &c. Published by Holland, Oxford Street.—Upon the King's recovery the popular tide turned abruptly, and, before the end of April, the satirists were making capital out of the excessive gush of loyalty which greeted the King's restoration to health. The felicitations offered on this occasion were not, however, more extravagant than the congratulations which would have been offered the Regent had the ■ been altered. In the present print the procession is on its way to St. Paul's ■ return thanks; the Volunteers are keeping the line of route; the windows are filled with rejoicing spectators, smiling and bowing, with ribands, favours, and mottoes, inscribed with printed sentiments complimentary ■ the monarch. A man, wearing ■ leek in ■ hat, is at the head of the train, seated ■ a goat; the Aldermen, without hats ■ wigs, are finding some difficulty in keeping their ■. The Lord Mayor has ■ time of it, while holding the Sword of State; two footmen are steadying him by the leg—his horse has been slightly startled—as he is passing ■ noisy band of musicians, stationed in ■ balcony. 'And all the people rejoiced and sung, Long live the King! May the King live for ever!' The King's well-appointed ■ of eight white horses is passing ■ show—the Royal Waxworks: 'Here you may see King Solomon in all his glory!' The state carriage contains the King, the Queen, and the coarse-featured Madame Schwellenberg; the Guards ■ bringing up the rear.

October 23, 1789. An Antiquarian. Published by W. Holland, 50 Oxford Street.

October 24, 1789. Sergeant Kite, Sergeant Recruteur. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly. (N.B. Fores' Museum ■ opened. Admission, one shilling.)—The Duke of Orleans is represented as Sergeant Kite, dressed in the uniform of ■ hussar—a tight tunic and breeches, given, in the coloured versions of the plate, ■ green, faced with crimson, and richly laced with gold; with a furred cocked hat and ■ cockade; inscribed ■ the scarf he ■ wearing the words 'Vive la Liberté!' destined shortly to become the keynote for all the reckless destruction, indiscriminate slaughter, and bloodthirsty atrocities of the great French Revolution. An enormous sabre is trailed by his side, and he is resting a halbert with a head shaped like By his side is his drummer, whose figure the artist has treated with the broadest grotesque; the Frenchman's earrings, together with a pigtail of inordinate length, are exciting the wonder of the spectators. The Sergent Recruteur is beating up his recruits Billingsgate amongst the fishsaga. The Poissardes of France making themselves a terrible reputation throughout Europe by the violence of their behaviour, and the satirist hinted in the present plate that the Duke of Orleans would be able to congenial revolutionary levies amongst the muscular vixens of the fish-market here. The viragoes of Billingsgate do favour the Duke's mission; they giving the Frenchman what may be termed a reception: his advances met with taunts, contumely, and apparently by challenges ignominious personal combat.

January 1, 1789. Grog on Board. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly. Republished January 1794.—'Sweet Poll of Plymouth' has been smuggled on board during the absence, let believe, of the chief officers, who have genteelly gone to take Tea Shore in the port. A pretty 'mid-shipmite' and a black boy are deep in the perusal of a volume of fascinating voyages. The rest of the persons represented are, from the dog upwards, variously interested in their fair female visitor. One tar, in a fur cap, is singing verses, with his truant eye fixed the nymph instead of on his music; another old salt, who is handing the punchbowl about, has evidently neglected his pipe, which he is vainly endeavouring rekindle from the bowl of a comrade, who has eyes for nothing but the lady. 'Poll' is quite a Cleopatra for beauty, grace, and love of pleasure, if not for frailty and splendour; she is reposing with negligent ease in the stalwart arms of a good-looking sailor, for want of a luxurious couch, and her foot is resting on the knee of another favoured swain, who proportionately proud of the honour. Her débonnaire ladyship is not only distinguished for the beauty of person and condescension of essential to make herself adored by poor Jack; she sports the wealth of jewellery supposed be irresistibly gratifying in his sight—a pair of bracelets, earrings, imposing shoe-buckles, and, to cap all, a pair of watches, with massive chains and heavy trinkets galore, disposed on either side.

January 1789. Tea Shore. Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly. Republished January 1, 1794.—A companion the last print, affording the suppositious contrast between high and low life in port. The officers are leaving the vulgar jollifications of Grog on Board for delicate flirtations the tea-table on shore. In those days, when opportunities for personal distinction ~~was~~ ~~was~~ frequent, commanders ~~was~~ recognised and entertained ~~by~~ heroes, and their visits on shore were ~~was~~ unfrequently a round of agreeable festivals and social triumphs. Rowlandson has shown how graciously the fair are regarding the ~~of~~ of Neptune, who are doing their best ~~to~~ ~~to~~ favourable impressions in return. The head of the house, who is ■■ apparently of the slightest consequence ■■ this occasion, is left ■■ indifference and the charge of the ■■ urn ; while the naval commanders are carrying all the admiration before them, ■■ the venerable principle, lyrically rendered by John Dryden

GREG ON BOARD

TEA ON SHORE.

(although the sentiment was ■ novelty in his day), that 'none but the brave deserve the fair.'

February 1, 1789. Careless Attention. Published by J. Griggs, 216 Holborn.—A corpulent sufferer, disabled by gout, is thrown into ■ dreadful quandary; he is seated by the fire, where the kettle ■ boiling over, deluging the place, and threatening the invalid with the dangers of scalding. The table, and the little comforts spread thereon, ■ thrown down in the struggle ■ get out of the dangerous vicinity; the gouty cripple is vainly shouting and storming for assistance; his nurse, who is much ■ young, sprightly, and good-looking for her situation, is ■ the door of the apartment, struggling in the embraces of

INTERRUPTION, ■ INCONVENIENCE ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

■ dashing young spark—probably the master's undutiful heir; the coquetteries of the pair have engaged their full attention, to the neglect of the unfortunate head of the house, of whose critical position they ■ delightfully unconscious.

April 1, 1789. Interruption, ■ Inconvenience of ■ Lodging-house. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly. Republished April 1, 1824.—A ■ dowager and her maid ■ thrown into ■ ■ of consternation easy ■ appreciate by the sudden entrance ■ the occupations of the toilette of ■ roystering young 'blood,' who, from the disorder of his dress and the recklessness of his attitude, has evidently returned from the tavern, something the ■ for ■ evening's potations, and not strikingly clear in his head as ■ his ultimate destination.

June ■ 1789. A Sufferer for Decency.—The interior of ■ barber's shop, conducted on popular principles, as the notice ■ the lantern has it : 'Shave with ease and expedition for one penny.' It ■ be noticed that the lathering is accomplished on ■ wholesale scale ; ■ boy is waiting on the customers with ■ small pail of soap, and ■ officiating with ■ lathering-brush of the size of ■ decent hearth-broom ; the barber ■ waiting, with his ■ poised in the air, ready ■

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ FOR ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

let ■ descend with ■ swoop ■ the face of the sufferer ; expedition of ■ tion rather than ■ artistic delicacy of handling being the order of the day ■ the class of establishment delineated by the caricaturist, who in the days of universal shaving ■ have known ■ of sacrificing to custom.

1789. A Penny Barber. Companion ■ Sufferer for Decency (June 1789). Published by W. Holland, 50 Oxford Street.—A stout old gentleman, enveloped surrounded as he is by ■ group of limp persons of fashion ; ■ fat dowager, who has propped herself against the back of the steersman, is trying to subdue her qualms by applying ■ cordials ; ■ more dignified lady is indulging in attitudes expressive of tragic despair. Three fair creatures have abandoned themselves ■ ■ ■ prostration on the opposite side. The sailors ■ ■ ■ exhibiting their disgust at the operation of washing down the decks and attending to the necessities ■ ■ the sufferers ; fresh supplies of buckets, for the accommodation of the indisposed, are being handed up from below by ■ brace of ' Beef-eaters,' whose presence, ■ ■ far from adding dignity ■ the company, is ■ ■ ■ of inconvenience, since they

■ ■ ■ RACING ■ ■ ■

■ ■ ■ are painfully sea-sick ; and their halberts, from the incapacity of the holders ■ ■ ■ threatening mischief ■ the helpless passengers around.

1789 (?). The Start.

1789 (?). The Betting Post.—The stout veteran ■ his cob, with a crutch in one hand, ■ intended for Colonel O'Kelly,¹ ■ of the ■ ■ ■ prosperous

¹ 'Colonel Dennis O'Kelly, the celebrated owner of Eclipse (this racehorse won everything he ran for), amassed an immense fortune by gambling and the turf, and purchased the estate of Canons, near Edgware, which was formerly possessed by the Duke of Chandos, and is still remembered as ■ ■ of the most magnificent mansion and establishment of modern times. The Colonel's training ■ ■ ■ and paddocks, at another estate near Epsom, were supposed to be the best-appointed in England.'—Hone's 'Table Book.'

turfites of his day, and the [redacted] of the most successful racehorse in the annals of racing.

1789 (?). The Course.

1789 (?). The Mount.—Colonel O'Kelly, the gouty [redacted] who figures throughout the Racing series, is again introduced; this eminent patron of the turf is giving his parting injunctions [redacted] his jockey.¹

1789. A Cart Race. Published by William Holland, Oxford Street, 1789.—This plate bears Rowlandson's signature, and is dated 1788. The print is executed in bold outline, filled in with aquatint, and coloured in capital imitation of the original drawing. The lowly cottages of [redacted] hamlet [redacted] partly distinguish-able through the prodigious clouds of dust raised by the unruly eccentricities of [redacted] pleasure-party, represented [redacted] taking the air in three overladen and ramshackle carts, drawn by wretched horses barely [redacted] from the knacker's yard.

THE COURSE.

The amusement of the moment is an extemporised [redacted]. One [redacted] leading triumphantly; the horse is dashing along, urged [redacted] by the bludgeon of [redacted] costermonger, who [redacted] conducting [redacted] party of beauties from St. Giles's, of the [redacted] florid and dégage type. Cart number two is considerably overmanned; the horse [redacted] down; the driver is alternately trying [redacted] whip his horse into animation or [redacted]

¹ A clever drawing, which has never, apparently, been engraved, Colonel O'Kelly Enjoying [redacted] Private Trial previous [redacted] his Making [redacted] Match, belonging [redacted] John West, Esq., [redacted] noticed in [redacted] Appendix.

■ antagonists. One free-and-easy lady is falling ■ the head of the cart, and two more ■ being spilt ■ the tail, where they ■ sprawling in attitudes of considerable freedom; ■ dog is indignantly barking ■ the fallen. A third cart, which ■ in the rear, ■ loaded ■ heavily that it ■ there is difficulty in persuading the horse ■ all.

July 20, 1789. The High-mettled Racer.

1789. Don't he Deserve it? Designed and etched by T. Rowlandson; aquatinted by I. Roberts. Published by William Holland, 50 Oxford Street.—An elderly rake, evidently ■ old offender, taken in the fact, is receiving the well-merited abuse of his modishly-apparelled better half; the fair companion of this compromising disclosure ■ covered with blushing confusion; and various witnesses, summoned by the sounds of the wife's indignant eloquence, are expressing their horror ■ the husband's obliquity.

THE MOUNT.

1789. She don't Deserve it. Designed and etched by T. Rowlandson; aquatinted by I. Roberts. Published by William Holland, 50 Oxford Street.—A pretty servant-maid, who has evidently been detected in ■ irregularity, is literally 'kicked out,' en deshabelle, by ■ of ■ mistress. The old master, who is evidently the ■ of the damsel's disgrace, and who has lost his wig in the confusion of the disclosure, is 'starting like ■ guilty thing,' obviously anticipating the connubial wrath which, in due course, will descend on his reprobate head.

September 1789. Bay of Biscay. Designed and published by T. Rowlandson, 1 James Street, Adelphi.—A ship is tossing on the stormy [] of the Bay of Biscay; a boatload of passengers, who have put off from the distant vessel, seems likely [] be swamped by the waves, which [] rolling mountains high. Fear and helplessness prevail [] all sides; the [] is running [] roughly for the oars [] of much avail; the captain and his [] have, it appears, abandoned their ship for [] questionable chance of escaping in the long-boat; there are three ladies with them; [] has apparently swooned, another is leaning over the side, with clasped hands, terrified [] the imminence of the danger; and the third [] in paroxysms which necessitate her forcible restraint. Rowlandson possessed the [] and perception [] bring [] every point in a desperate situation with thrilling effect, and his masterly power of depicting 'horrors,' &c., [] in its way more striking, perhaps, even than his felicitous art of hitting off the salient humours of any of those ludicrous situations which his fanciful and inventive faculties suggested in exhaustless succession.

1789. Chelsea Reach. Designed and published by T. Rowlandson, 1 James Street, Adelphi.—A wondrous contrast to the horrors of the companion print, the Bay of Biscay; all [] sunshine, jollification, and happiness. A gaily-decorated shallop, somewhat like a miniature edition of [] state barge, is proceeding up the river with [] pleasure-party, rowed by six gaily-clad watermen, wearing jockey caps, [] the custom of the time. A party of highly genteel ladies and gentlemen are exchanging courtesies, and pledging healths and toasts, under the shade of their parasols; [] amateur musician is entertaining his friends with serenades on his flute, players [] French horns are contributing [] the diversion, a servant in livery is at the helm, and a large union-jack is flying. In the background [] the tranquil river, with its distant bridges.

November 1789. La Place des Victoires.—If Rowlandson's visits to Paris had produced no other memorial than his inimitable picture La Place des Victoires, Paris, we should be satisfied with the result of his familiarity with Parisian life [] the period immediately antecedent [] the Revolutionary era.

The study, [] whole, is [] of the most memorable [] can ascribe [] skilful hand and [] remarkable powers of profitable observation. The Circus, built by Mansard, [] of the features of Paris under the Grand Monarque, remains in all its freshness [] the present day; but [] has shared the fate [] similar [] would have suffered [] it remained in the busy precincts of [] East of London. Finding itself in the heart, [] it were, of the trading [] of the city, near the Bourse, and hedged and elbowed around by the warehouses and industries of the busy commercial population, [] has undergone an indignity which would [] the spirit of its founder and make the shade of the little monarch, in honour of whose victories [] was erected and christened, exclaim against the degeneracy which the taste of his countrymen has undergone, and he would probably deplore the concession to utilitarianism which has transmogrified the well-known spot. La Place des Victoires in its present aspect is curiously disguised by hideous placards ; between each of the columns appear two humorous advertising boards, filling up the intermediate spaces, and inscribed with recommendations to purchasers to secure their wardrobe bon Diab!e, and notices of similar inviting character. Rowlandson has given a further indication of the Parisian centre—at the expense of topographical accuracy, it be admitted—by introducing the towers of Notre Dame in proximity somewhat closer than is legitimately warranted by the actual position of the mother-church.

The monument, in Rowlandson's veracious representation, is a splendid example of exaggerated glorification. The statue of a warrior—surely intended to resemble the little monarch to whose glory it is dedicated—is trampling on an allegorical personage typifying the conquered enemies of France ; while the figure of Fame, holding her trumpet ready to sound the victor's praises, is crowning the hero with a wreath. Four chained slaves, in bronze, indicative of Louis' triumphs, are shown at the base ; these figures may be seen in the Louvre. A courtier, or a disabled general, is pushed along in a ramshackle carriage, a sort of wheeled sedan, drawn by an old soldier, with footmen to follow ; the Frenchman regarding the stupendous monument raised to the glories of the Grand Nation with rapturous devotion. An abbé, with his hands in an enormous muff, is passing, with his nose in the air ; a coquette à la mode is leaning her arm and raising her hood to shoot forth glances of fascination ; a handsome young officer, wearing a monstrous queue, is launching an admiring look towards the fair beguiler ; but her attention is engaged elsewhere, and the Parthian shot is harmless. A shoeblack in the foreground is teaching a poodle to dance ; the comical animal's head is decorated with an old peruke. A pair of extensive beaux of the period are saluting each other with elaborate bows which would have filled the late Mr. Simpson, M.C., with despair. In the right-hand corner is shown a monk (Sterne's original Brother Lorenzo), shrinking away from recollections of the past. A downright English John Bull, in huge riding-boots, and a pretty English girl, his companion, in a habit, lacking the surrounding enthusiasm, are looking at the monument with the indifference of travellers who are in duty bound to take note of all the sights, but who, beyond the principle involved, find small gratification in the ordeal ; an English mastiff, the property of the strangers, is curiously regarding another exotic, an Italian greyhound. In the distance are shown a female porter and her donkey, followed by a procession of friars ; a French nobleman and his lady are driving by in gallant state, with a Suisse and a whole string of genteel footmen clinging like flies behind their chariot.

As the founder took some pains to inform the world (that is to say, Paris, which, to Frenchmen under the reign of the Grand Monarque, was the universe), this wonderful structure, à la gloire of Louis le Grand, was erected by the Duc de la Feuillade, one of the idols of his age, and first satellite of the Sun of Versailles; Peer and Marshal of France, Governor of the Dauphin, Colonel of the Guards, &c.—in every way a most distinguished person. The monument was erected in front of this eminent courtier's Paris mansion, the Hôtel de la Feuillade. The principle of its erection was ingenious, ostensibly commemorating the glories of his master, the 'father of his people, and the conductor of invincible armies;' the celebrity of the patriotic founder of this monument is barely of secondary prominence, since his name and various high offices, emblazoned on the granite pile, was bequeathed at the same time to the everlasting regard of posterity. The perpetual durability of fame in this monument was doomed to last one century, and no more: the calculations of the Marshal did not include the coming French Revolution. In the January of 1793, the 'grand nation' became intoxicated with a saturnalia of blood, in which they avenged imposts, burdens, and slavery—evils which they had suffered in the past—by sacrificing the descendant of le Grand Monarque, a passive victim, on the scaffold to the vicious legacies of his predecessors. The fury which had made a martyr of the king, whose chief enjoyment had been the alleviation of the condition of his subjects, taking a retrospective turn, vented its destructive rage on every relic which recalled the servitude of generations—after the slaughter of the living, the national vengeance was wreaked on inanimate objects, and very naturally the ill-advised monument of the Place des Victoires came in for an early share of attention; and the memorial bequeathed to the everlasting admiration of posterity was scattered by the winds in a moment which effectually defeated the intentions of the testator; the only wonder being how the bronze figures escaped the fate of the furnace, and was spared being converted into artillery.

Under the circumstances, of the complete disappearance of this triumph of servile adulation, it is interesting to recall, in a remote degree, the incidents which attended its foundation. In the letters of Madame de Sévigné we trace a picture indicative of the events; first we are introduced to the zeal displayed by the Duc de la Feuillade, that inveterate and unequalled courtier, and his passion for raising monuments to the glorification of his master and himself. We follow the Marshal's first intentions, and are told how they were modified; we notice the erection of the pedestrian statue, with its glaring anomalies, to adorn the gardens of Versailles; and then we are instructed how the sculptor, Van den Bogaert—who, in compliment to his patrons, had changed his name to Desjardins—was entrusted with the execution of the extraordinary conception which was to shed a lustre on the Place des Victoires to perpetuity.

Lettre DCC. de Madame Sévigné Comte de Bussy, Paris, 20 Juillet, 1679.—'. . . Il dira les nouvelles et les préparatifs du mariage du Roi d'Espagne, du choix du Prince de la Princesse d'Harcourt pour la conduite la reine d'Espagne époux, et la belle charge que le roi donnée M. de Marsillac, sans préjudice de la première; et du démêlé du Cardinal de Bouillon M. de Montausier, et M. de La Feuillade, courtisan passant les courtisans passés, fait venir bloc de marbre qui tenoit toute la Saint Honoré: et comme les soldats qui le conduisoient ne vouloient point faire place carosse de M. le Prince qui étoit dedans, il y eut combat entre les soldats les valets de pied: le peuple s'en mêla, le marbre se rangea, et le prince passa. Ce prélat pourra encore que ce marbre chez M. de La Feuillade, qui fait ressusciter Phidias ou Praxitèle pour tailler la figure du roi cheval dans marbre, comme lui coûtera plus de mille écus.¹

In a footnote, by the editor, are further enlightened on the use which marble finally applied, by order of the Duke de la Feuillade:—

'La Feuillade changea d'avis et sortit du bloc de marbre en question pédestre qui prêtoit à la critique, par le mélange bizarre du costume romain recouvert du royal français. Cette statue du ciseau Desjardins (autrement Van den Bogaert) été placée l'Orangerie de Versailles.'

The next piece of information, also given in the editor's footnote, more the point:—

'C'est même artiste qui, six plus tard, exécuté le monument de Place Victoires, aussi magnifique qu'impolitique, renversé en 1793 milieu des fureurs de l'anarchie. Il ne de ce monument que les quatre figures, en bronze, d'esclaves enchaînés qui désignoient les nations dont la France triomphé dans le XVII^e siècle. Ces figures sont dans la Collection de France.—G. D. S. G.'

A fair-sized view of the Circus, Place des Victoires, and of the monument, taken from the Hotel de la Feuillade, which would have occupied frontage facing the semicircle, published about 1686, engraved by N. Guerard. The title runs thus:—

'Veue de la Place des Victoires où M. le Maréchal Duc de la Feuillade dressé un monument public à la gloire de Louis le Grand, de la statue de ce Monarque couronné par la Victoire, accompagnée de Trophées, de Médailles, de bas-reliefs, d'inscriptions, sur les actions glorieuses de sa vie de son règne. Le Mars, 1686.'

Numerous highflown praises of the King engraved the base of this vainglorious monument, well as a of the various engagements fought in the reign of Louis the Magnificent.

¹ Sévigné, vol. vi 98-157.

The principal inscription will give a fair impression of the of these panegyrics :—¹

'A Louis le Grand, le père et conducteur des toujours heureux.—
Après avoir vaincu Ennemis, Protégé alliez. Adjousté de puissants peuples à son Empire, Assuré les Frontières par des places imprenables, joint l'Océan la Méditerranée. Chassé les pirates mers, Reformé Loix, Destrut l'hérésie, porté par le bruit de les nations les plus Barbares à le venir révéler des extremitéz de terre. Et réglé parfaitement toutes choses dedans et au dehors par la grandeur de courage de son génie.

A DULL HUSBAND.

'Francois Vicomte Daubusson, Duc de la Feuillade, Pair Mareschal de France, Gouverneur du Dauphine, et Colonel des Gardes Françoises,

'Pour perpetuelle memoire

'A la postérité.'

¹ Place des Victoires. A circular open space, surrounded by houses, forming together one design, built by Mansard, 1686. Portions of the original statue of Louis XIV., raised by the Duc de la

November 29, 1789. Mercury and his Advocates Defeated, ■ Vegetable Intrenchment.—This print introduces a collision between two systems of medical ■■■■■. The ■■■■■ is Swainson's dépôt for Velno's Vegetable Syrup, Frith Street, Soho. List of Cures, ■ 1788, 5,000; in 1789, 10,000. Swainson has entrenched himself in the centre of ■ barricade, formed of his specifics, ■ bottle of which he is exhibiting, with an air of triumph, ■ the posse of old practitioners, who, armed with dissecting-knives, mortars, mercury, prescriptions, and mineral pills, ■■■ preparing for a furious onslaught upon the innovator, whose introduction of Velno's Syrup has deprived them of the support of their profitable clients.

1789. A Dull Husband.—An interior scene, introducing ■ ■ ■ drawing-room of more refined character than Rowlandson generally selects for representation. The ■■■■■ evidently occupy a wealthy position in life. The lady has musical tastes, ■ appears; in the background is ■ harpsicord, the fair performer ■ playing the harp, and a guitar is lying at her feet. The husband has no soul for sweet sounds, ■ the soothing harmonies which his elegant companion has produced have lulled him into forgetfulness; however it may happen, the gentleman is very evidently, and unpoetically, fast asleep.

Feuillade, in the middle, which ■■■ destroyed during the Revolution, ■■ now in the Louvre: it ■■ replaced by a statue of General Desaix, which, in its turn, was removed for the present one of Louis XIV. in ■■■■■ of a Roman emperor, by Bosio.

1790.

January 1, 1790. Tythe Pig. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.—
Rowlandson has taken ■ vexatious institution, ■ enforced in his day, and turned it to satiric ■■■■■. A vicar, who we presume is suffering for the sin of gluttony—a failing ■ which ■ ■■■ time, if tradition ■ in any degree reliable, ■■ sons of ■■■ churches were ■■■ than slightly prone—since he ■ ■■■ invalided by an attack of gout, ■ seated in the official reception-room of his residence, within view of his cure, in state, as becomes ■ dignity of the Establishment, ■■ receive the tithes of ■■ parish. His clerk is planted by his side, auditing An ■■■■ of the Tythes of this Parish. This functionary ■ examining, with somewhat minute scrupulousness, a ■ pig which is borne ■ for approval by ■ comely maiden.

TYTHE FIG.

The contributor of the said pig, a country clown, who is evidently but half signed part with his belongings, is standing in the doorway scratching shock head, wearing a face which expresses anything but approval of the surrender of porker.

No date: 1790. A Roadside Inn.—Two travellers stopping refreshment a pretty rustic hostel. A wain, drawn by a yoke of horses, shown passing up the road.

January 1, 1790. A Butcher. Published by T. Rowlandson, 50 Poland Street.—In point of refinement this print has nothing recommend it; a barbarous rendering of a subject, which has in itself little of the picturesque, be well imagined. The subject is, however, treated with so much force and originality, that considered it worthy be inserted in our selection, as a representative example of Rowlandson's abilities in the savage walk—a branch which he brought especial qualifications. And the object of this work give readers a fair estimate of the abilities of an artist whose pictures reflect, in a great measure, the dispositions and of his times, we have introduced than one subject which may, its individual merits or defects, first strike the critic as at least coarse, if altogether free from objectionable associations.

A ROADSIDE INN.

January 10, 1790. Frog Hunting. Published by T. Rowlandson, 50 Poland

Street.—Three Frenchman of quality, adorned in the ~~most~~ modish taste, with their frills, powdered curls, pigtails, ear-rings, ruffles, and dress swords, are plunging knee deep in a pond of water, hunting, with the enthusiasm of true epicures, a party of frightened frogs. A fashionably clad Frenchwoman stands ing on the bank, holding a parasol in one hand, and a row of frogs, the spoils of the chase, strung on a skewer, in the other.

A BUTCHER.

February 20, 1790. Toxophilites (large plate). Published by E. Harding, 132 Fleet Street.

February 20, 1790. Repeal of the Test Act. Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly.

■■■ the Dragon's chaplains ■■■
 More moderate ■■■ those by far |
 For they, poor knaves, ■■■ glad to cheat,
 To get their wives ■■■ children ■■■
 But these will not be fobb'd off so ;
 They must have wealth and power too.

An exaggerated, view from ■ Conservative point of observation, of the results which were ■ be anticipated ■ the repeal of the Test Act ■ allowed ■ be carried.

This caricature ■■ put forth ■■ the time Doctors Priestley and Price—those revolution sinners, ■ their opponents styled them—were lecturing and spreading broadcast principles of religious equality, reforms, which, ■ the Ministers industriously circulated, if carried into effect, would prove subversive of everything. A portly Bishop, with his Refutation of Dr. Price by his side, ■ left ■ the tender mercies of the Reformers—'And when they had ■■■ the shepherd, the sheep ■■■ scattered.' The work of revision is carried on by main force, two of the 'new lights,' aided by stout cudgels, ■■ converting the ■■■ grown Shepherd: 'Make room for the Apostle of Liberty;' and 'God assisting us, nothing is to be feared.' Doctor Priestley is superintending the demolition of the venerated edifice: 'Make haste to pull down that, and we'll build ■ ■■■ in its place.' Two of the Reformers are displaying their 'brotherly love' by fighting for the possession of the Chancellor's purse and ■■■ The Thirty-nine Articles ■■ sent ■ feed a bonfire. A leader of the movement, inspired by 'love of our country,' has climbed up where the insignia of church and ■■■ ■■ seen swinging upon a sign-post. He is provided with ■ flaming Torch of Liberty, with which he is threatening their destruction.

Fox ■ shown as the arch-director of this innovating agitation:—'day next, ■ charity sermon by the Rev. Charles Fox.' The Whig chief is drawn ■ ■ window, armed with a speaking-trumpet, and advertising 'Places under Govern- ■■■ ■■ disposed of. N.B. Several Faro and E. O. Tables in good condition.' Dissenting preachers are hurrying up, furnished with well-filled money-bags, ■ ■■■ the political influence which Fox is openly holding ■■ for purchase, without any attempt at disguise.

1790. Dressing for a Masquerade. (Cyprians.)

1790. Dressing for ■ Masquerade. (Ladies.)

1790. A French Family. T. Rowlandson, del. S. Alken, fecit. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.—One of the two subjects highly commended by H. Angelo in his 'Reminiscences.' The companion, An Italian Family, ■■ be given under the head of caricatures published in 1792. Both impressions are ■■■ and very seldom ■■ with. These prints ■■ supposed ■ represent the domestic and interior lives of foreign artists, ■ studied from observations founded, it is presumed, ■ the everyday habits of the aliens domiciled in England. Monsieur and his family ■ probably professional dancers, and the picture introduces ■ ■ their ■ ■ intimate hours of practising; at all events, ■ find nearly the entire generation giving up their energies—somewhat ■ the neglect of the proprieties, it is true—to the practice of the one accomplishment in which the politest of nations ■ supposed to enjoy pre-eminence. The grandfather, in a cotton nightcap, is supplying the music from his fiddle, but the contagion of motion is affecting his aged limbs, and he ■ skipping about with the animation of old Vestris; by his side is the youngest child, who, ■ in her night-clothes, is practising the first positions. It will be noticed that, in spite of somewhat squalid surroundings, the whole generation excel in personal finery: a profusion of hair, dressed in the extreme of fashion, ruffles, furbelows, frills, bows, ear-rings, and elegant slippers, ■ displayed by the various members.

The ■ and daughter ■ gracefully executing a pas de deux. The person of Madame is charmingly rendered; an elaborately constructed tower of fair hair, and a nodding plume of feathers, add height and distinction to her figure, to which the designer has lent a grace and ease of motion peculiarly French. Monsieur is truly magnificent in the item of wig; his pink satin coat is hung ■ the top of the turn-up bedstead, and he is disporting himself in ■ sleeved vest; the lower limbs of the gentleman give room for conjecture. Whether he has taken the liberty of appearing in sans-culotte negligence out of respect to the principles of the Revolution, then in its fury, ■ whether his nether garments and stockings have been pledged to satisfy the necessities of the hour, is not clear. Perhaps the artist drew the Frenchman in this guise as a concession ■ English prejudices at the period when it was a pretty universally received theory that his compatriots lived ■ frogs exclusively, and had thrown away their culottes for good; the last supposition being to ■ large degree warranted by the maniacal ■ of the Jacobin, Poissarde, and other sections ■ Paris. In the left-hand ■ of the picture is a cleverly designed group, somewhat independent of the main action. A French child, dressed in the burlesque of miniature manhood, ■ then adopted by our tasteful neighbours, is playing ■ pipe ■ tambourine and training ■ pair of performing poodles to dance a minuet ■ their hind legs. A lean cat is vainly trying ■ find something ■ satisfy her hunger ■ the cupboard. The only decent article of furniture in the chamber—which ■ dirty, patched, and poor—is a concession to vanity in ■ form of ■ large mirror.

March, 1790. A Kick-up at a Hazard Table. Published by Wm. Holland, Oxford Street.—A large plate, executed in bold outline with ■ little mezzo work, introduced in the darker parts. The Kick-up ■ of ■ serious character; the gamblers who lately occupied the front of the table are upset in the confusion, others are endeavouring to get out of the way of the danger. A buck in the King's uniform—a loser, it would seem, from his empty pocket-book—has drawn his pistol at a player opposite, who has presumably lost the irate gentleman's gold, since he is covering the pile with his hand, and with the other is aiming, in his turn, at his adversary's person. Great excitement prevails around; one is dashing a chair at the officer's outstretched firearm, and another brother officer is striking with a bottle and a candlestick the other weapon; bludgeons are flourished, and swords drawn by some of the gamblers, while others are endeavouring to stand clear before the bullets begin to fly.

A party of gentlemen assembled on the evening of a Court Drawing-room at the Royal Chocolate-house in St. James's Street, where disputes at hazard produced a quarrel, which became general throughout the room. Three gentlemen were mortally wounded, and the affray was at length concluded by the interposition of the Royal Guards, who were compelled to knock the parties down with the butt ends of their muskets indiscriminately, as entreaties and commands were of no avail. A footman of Colonel Cunningham's, greatly attached to his master, rushed through the swords, seized, and literally carried him out by force without injury.

May 29, 1790. Who kills first for a Crown. In two compartments.—The objects of the chase being the respective crowns of two kingdoms, both of which were disturbed at the date of this publication, by the ambitious views of the advanced parties; headed by the Heir-Apparent in the one, and the Duke of Orleans in the other.

The Crown of England is threatened in the upper compartment, and the situation is typified by a Stag Hunt in the Park at Windsor. The Prince of Wales, on horseback, is performing the part of huntsman, and his followers are travestied as the Prince's pack of hounds—a favourite figure with the pictorial satirists. Sheridan is the leading dog; the faces of Mrs. Fitzherbert, Burke, a Bishop, and others, are distinguishable among the pack, which is harassing the royal quarry.

The Crown of France is endangered in a similar fashion. It will be remembered that the stability of the government of Louis the Sixteenth received its first shock from the Duke of Orleans, who, imitating the factious conduct of the Prince of Wales at home, was in alliance with the enemies of the throne; in the person of the Duke, with the Revolutionary parties of France.

The royal French Stag is run down at Versailles. The Duke of Orleans, first Prince of the blood, is acting as whipper-in. He is dressed in a fantastic habit of le sport, a compromise between a French postilion and a huntsman; he

■ winding ■ his pack with une ■ ■ ■ de chasse. The individuals constituting the aristocratic French pack ■ ■ ■ described below the print, the ■ ■ ■ giving some indication of the members of that Palais Royale clique of intriguers which wrought so much evil ■ the reigning branch. Certain members of the Orleans pack ■ ■ ■ destined ■ become notorious on the theatre of events which ■ ■ ■ then impending over France.

1. Madame La C'tesse de Buffon. 2. Madame La C'tesse de Blot. 3. Le Cte. ■ Touche. 4. Le Mqis. de Sillery. 5. Le Cte. de Vauban. 6. Le Bn. ■ Talleyrand (who, in the hunt, has seized the royal stag with his teeth). 7. M. de Simon.

1790. Philip Quarrel, the English Hermit, and Beau Fidelle, ■ ■ ■ mischievous She-Monkey, famous for her skill ■ ■ ■ viol de gamba.—Philip Thicknesse, leaving his hermitage in the background (see Public Characters, 1806), is journeying along one mile from Bath; the ex-Governor of Languard Fort ■ in regimentals, but instead of ■ hat the artist has drawn a boar's head, the present of Lord Jersey, above that of the Hermit. More particular reference ■ this boar's head ■ made in the Gentleman's Magazine, 1761, pp. 34, 79.

Across Philip's back is slung his wooden gun;¹ under his left ■ ■ ■ held his writings, which gained him but equivocal fame; a bare axe, marked 'Gratitude,' ■ in his right hand; the Duke of Marlboro's pistols ■ in his belt; he has a Subscription Scheme, Gunpowder, ■ a cartouche-box, and his foot is resting on the Vagrant Act. Miss Ford (Mrs. Thicknesse), as Beau Fidelle, ■ following Quarrel's wanderings; her viol de gamba is strapped across her back.

(Handbill.)

STRAYED FROM KENSINGTON ■ ■ ■

A VICIOUS OLD DOG;

A mongrel, with ■ large mark on the left side of his head, resembling ■ tarnished cockade; on his collar is marked P. T., but answers to the ■ ■ ■ of GALLSTONE; has got ■ sore tail, occasioned by ■ copper platter, cruelly tied to it some time since—the fright arising from which caused him to run away from London. He has a great aversion ■ the smell of gunpowder; is extremely mischievous, and very apt to snap and ■ those who let him into their houses; but, though very noisy, is easily quieted by the slightest threat. He has been heard of ■ Farthingoe, in Northamptonshire, where he attempted to bite the churchwardens; but being whipped from thence, has since been discovered lurking near the Royal Hotel, at Dover, and ■ supposed ■ be ■ ■ ■ hid ■ ■ ■ the rocks on the Kentish coast.

Whoever will ■ ■ ■ him and give intelligence by the post to J. G. (James Gillray), ■ No. ■ ■ ■ Bond Street, London, ■ that he may be found and muzzled, will be gratefully thanked!

¹ Wooden Gun. See Public Characters, 1806, p. ■

THE MONSTER.

B Argensteen takes the earliest opportunity of informing the nobility the public of Monster's reappearance in on Friday last, 4th He is dressed in a coat, prodigious cockade, and bears in every respect a striking much-respected character, PHILIP THICKNESSE, Esq.

He already frightened number of women and children, made several desperate attempts upon different noblemen, and attempted to cut his own children.

THE PAVILION,

Since arrival London he has assumed the of Lieut.-Gov. Gallstone; strongly suspected that his present journey in order devour all editors of newspapers, engravers, and publishers of satiric prints, every other person who arraign his conduct. The public cautioned on their guard.

N.B.—The reward for his apprehension still in full force.

1790. An Excursion Brighthelmstone, made the year 1789, by Henry Wigstead and Thomas Rowlandson. Dedicated (by permission) to the Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. with eight engravings in aquatinta, from views taken on the road to and at that place. London: Printed for C. G. J. and I. Robinson, Paternoster Row. Oblong folio. June 1, 1790.

Introduction.—‘The following descriptive of an excursion to Brighthelmstone is intended to give those who have visited that delightfully situated town and its environs an idea of the pleasures with which a lively and feeling mind will be impressed in viewing those scenes which the Authors have endeavoured to illustrate. . . . Of the roads which lead to Brighthelmstone, immediately from London being most frequented, the Authors have endeavoured to familiarise the traveller by pencil and pen.

WAITING FOR DINNER.

‘The various which are introduced are slightly represented, and intended merely to impress the mind with the general effects of It is, in short, a conversation narrative, illustrated occasionally with sketches of scenes and incidents which seemed worthy of notice.’

The plates all drawn and etched by Rowlandson, and aquatinted by Alken.

Sutton. ('The Cock.')

Reigate. ('The White Hart' posting house.)

Crawley. (Sale of a horse by auction outside the 'George Inn.')

Cuckfield. (Market Day—a recruiting party, &c.)

Saloon ■ ■ ■ Marine Pavilion.

'The Marine Pavilion of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, on the ■■■ side of the Steine, is ■ striking object, and admirably calculated for the summer residence of ■ royal personage. . . . This Pavilion, correctly designed and elegantly executed, was begun and completed in five months. The furniture ■ adapted with great ■ ■ the style of the building. The Grand Saloon is beautifully decorated with paintings by Rebecca, executed in his best manner. The ■ ■ ensemble of ■ building is, in short, perfect harmony. The whole was executed by Mr. Holland, under the immediate inspection and direction of Mr. Weltjé, the Prince's German cook, who leased the property ■ ■ royal master.'

AT DINNER.

Bathing Machines.The Steine (and promenaders).Race Ground. The Course, the Stand, &c., with a race being

June 1, 1790. Saloon ■ ■ ■ Pavilion, Brighton. Aquatinted by T. Alken. Published by Messrs. Robinson.—One of a series of drawings made from the Regent's fantastic seaside residence, and published in aquatint. See An Excursion to Brighthelmston, made in the year 1789, by Henry Wigstead and Thomas Rowlandson. (1790.)

1790 (?). *Waiting for Dinner.*1790 (?). *After Dinner.*1790 (?). *Fox-hunters Relaxing.*1790 (?). *At Dinner.*1790 (?). Preparing for Supper.

About 1790. Evening.—A small etching. A ■ ■ ■ sportsman, lolling on ■ ■ ■ pony, and followed by a miscellaneous tribe of dogs, has evidently been ■ ■ ■ shooting, and ■ ■ ■ homeward way ■ ■ ■ fallen in with an encampment of gipsies, who have pitched their ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ wood; three brawny nymphs are sitting about in easy attitudes, and a fourth, leaning on the stranger's horse, ■ beguiling the Nimrod with her wiles ; it ■ probable, from the foolish ■ pression thrown into the rider's face, ■ that he is likely ■ fall an easy victim into mischievous hands.

August 6, 1790. Cattle at the River. The Horse Race. A View ■ Cornwall. The River; towing barges, &c. Rustic Refreshment. Winter Pastime: Skating on ■ Frozen River.

September 1790. A Dressing Room at Brighton. Published by I. Brown, PREPARING FOR SUPPER.

■ Crown Street, Soho.—As the title expresses, this plate represents the interior of ■ chamber ■ the fashionable marine ■ ■ ■ Three gentlemen are ■ ■ ■ in their combing-chairs; their hair is being curled and powdered by three hairdressers.

October 20, 1790. Four o'clock ■ ■ ■ Designed and etched by Thomas Rowlandson. Published by J. Jones.—This plate, which ■ entirely due ■ Rowlandson's hand, ■ etched ■ outline, and ■ ■ ■ in with aquatint, in imitation of ■ faint drawing in Indian ink. A young and well-favoured military buck

■ returned ■ house at the advanced and disreputable hour of four o'clock in the morning, as indicated in the title; he has evidently been 'making ■ night of it,' and ■ considerably the worse for ■ potations. His young and pretty wife, who is in bed, is thrown into a mixed condition between consternation, fear, and ■ at the condition of her gallant spouse; the husband ■ propped up in an armchair, and left ■ the ■ of two comely housemaids, who ■ making efforts ■ assist this hopeless rake to divest himself of ■ clothes—an essential preliminary towards going to ■ which he is signally unable ■ perform for ■. He is perfectly helpless in the hands of these wenches, and is contemplating with ■ imbecile air an empty purse, the result of ■ evening's recreations. In spite of the somewhat suggestive ■ of this subject, ■ the figures are graceful and pleasingly expressed, and the faces ■ delicate and attractive.

FOX-HUNTERS ■

October 20, 1790. Four o'clock in the Country. Designed and etched by T. Rowlandson. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.—The episode presented in this picture is the complete ■ of that shown in the companion plate, Four o'clock ■ Town. While the London rake is being assisted ■ his late bed the country Nimrod ■ rising with the dawn. The enthusiast for ■ chase has tumbled ■ of ■ early couch; his clothes ■ hastily thrown on in the partial light of daybreak, and he is, ■ half-asleep, making terrific exertions ■ draw ■ his boots. His wife, who has ■ had time ■ her toilette, and who, evidently, ■ resume her interrupted repose on ■ departure of the hunting party, is standing, exactly as she left her bed, with a tumbler of cordial and a glass, pouring out a nip of comfort to keep the cold, for the benefit of her sporting spouse. The chamber is alive with motion, and it is evidently the accustomed method of departure; pairs of dogs are rushing about, huntsmen and grooms are carrying saddles on their heads and making preparations for the start. The remains of last night's relaxations, in the shape of pipes and mugs of ale, are uncleared; and the articles scattered around, guns, saddles, whips, hunting-horns, and fox-skins, are the pronounced sporting paraphernalia of the country squire. A pretty child is tranquilly sleeping, in its cradle, undisturbed by the bustle of the hunter's early start.

1790. John Nichols.

With anger foaming and of vengeance full,
Why belloweth John Nichols like a bull?

—John Nichols is seated at a rustic table; the Gentleman's Magazine is at his feet; his literary productions—rebus, conundrum, riddle, charade, &c.—are scattered about. In the background is shown an allegory of the Temple of Fame, at the summit of Mount Parnassus, towards which the author is vainly stumping on stilts, propped up by books, with his Essay on Old Maids under his arm, the certificate which is to serve as his passport to immortality; his exertions are parodied by a monkey at his side, who has ascended to the top of a ladder and can get no higher.

1790. A Series of Miniature Groups and Scenes. Published by M. L., Brighthelmstone; and H. Brookes, Coventry Street, London.

1790. A Christening.

1790. The Duenna and Little Isaac. Engraved by W. P. Carey.

1791

January 13, 1791. The Prospect before us No. 1. Humanely inscribed to all those Professors of Music and Dancing whom it may fit. Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly.—The possible future condition of the foreign artists located within our shores, the performers of the Italian Opera, seems to have provoked three large engravings from Rowlandson's graver at the beginning of 1791. The straits in which these fashionable exotics, it was suggested, might be reduced by the decaying state of the theatre in which they had been playing are particularly dwelt on in one and a later caricature. It was found necessary to close their house for restorations, which, if the state of things hinted in Chaos is Come Again (February 4, 1791), may be considered in any way prophetic, was resolved to be soon. The Prospect before us evidently offers the choice of two conditions. The first to have been an appeal to the charitable, pending the construction of a new Opera House; the second, which was accepted, being the conversion of the Pantheon into a theatre; to substitute which in the end accidentally proved equally deplorable.

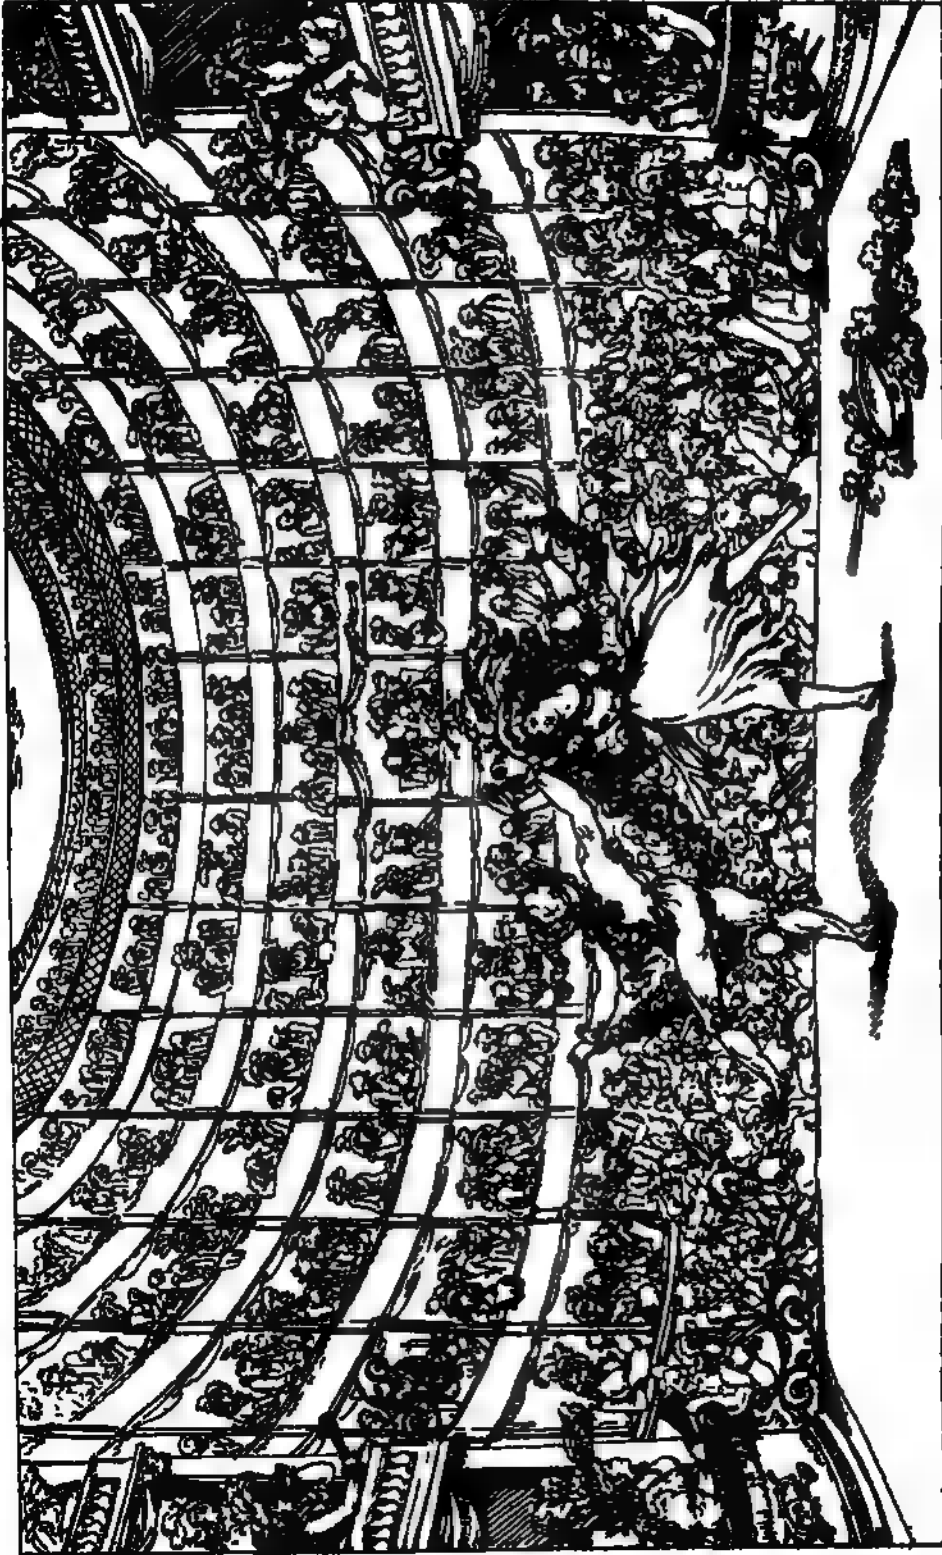

We first find the professors of music, singing, and dancing thrown on the vicarious exercise of their talents as a wandering troupe round the city. The model of the new house borne on a plea to the benevolent, much on the principle of the disabled sailors who, tramping the streets, singing and begging, carried the model of their ship, to tempt the liberality of the almsgiving public.

A sweeper-lad is dropping a copper into the laced hat of one of the French dancers, whose figure is probably intended for that of Didelot, one of the highest paid and most popular performers in his walk on our stage. A butcher, with evident sympathies for imported art, is compassionately dropping a bullock's heart into the hat of an elderly artist, whose figure may possibly be intended for that of old Vestris.

The tattered and reduced regiment of foreign performers is evidently not prospering on their present perambulating campaign, since, judging from their surroundings, they are reduced to solicit the patronage of the denizens of the most squalid neighbourhoods. Their graces are displayed outside the premises of one Michael Anderson, who, according to the notice-board, is engaged to a somewhat miscellaneous line of trading, 'purveying, brickmaking, breeches, brandy-balls, and all other kinds of sweetmeats.' The circumstances of the Italian Opera are more distinctly alluded to in a poster stuck on the wall, announcing: 'A new Fantoccini this evening, called "Humbugallo in the Dumps." A new piece called "The Battle of the Brickbats;" to conclude with a grand crush by all the performers.'

THE PROSPECT BEFORE US. NO. 1.

THE PROSPECT BEFORE US. NO. 2.

January 13, 1791. The Prospect before me No. 1. Respectfully dedicated to those Singers, Dancers, and Musical Professors who are fortunately engaged to the Proprietor of the King's Theatre, at the Pantheon. Published by S. W. Fores. —Dismissing the most fortunate artists whose services were not retained for the new enterprise, we return to the subject of the opening of the Pantheon. In anticipation of the success of this new Opera House, Rowlandson issued a large engraving representing a coup d'œil of the interior of the theatre, as seen from the stage during the performance of a ballet. The Royal box, in the centre, was tenanted by the King and Queen, and the boxes around were occupied by the nobility and leaders of fashion. On the stage were Didelot and Madame Theodore, dancing in the ballet of Amphion and Thalia. O'Reilly, in the orchestra, is presiding over the band. The dancers, at this period, were the highest paid performers in the company; with the leading artistes of the company were engaged vocalists Mara, Pacchierotti, Lazzarini, &c., for the performance of operas.

The Gentleman's Magazine thus notices the privileged rehearsal which preceded the regular performance:—

'Thursday, February 10, 1791.—This evening the Opera at the Pantheon was opened to the subscribers, and a very elegant audience attended the rehearsal of the performance of Armida. Though none of the Royal Family were present, a crowd of fashionable visitors exhibited patronage adequate to the support of any undertaking.'

European Magazine:—'February 17, 1791.—The new Opera House in the Pantheon was opened with Armida, in which Pacchierotti, Mara, Lazzarini, &c., distinguished themselves. Afterwards the ballet of Amphion and Thalia was performed, with applause, by Didelot, Theodore, &c.'

Another paragraph from the Gentleman's Magazine briefly mentions the end of this prosperous undertaking a year later:—

'Saturday, January 14, 1792.—This morning, between ten and eleven o'clock, a painter's room in one of the new buildings which had been added to the Pantheon, was enlarged sufficiently for the performance of operas, and discovered to be on fire. Before any engines were brought to the spot the fire had got to a height that all attempts to save the building were in vain. The fire kept burning with great fury for about three hours, by which time, the roof and part of the building having fallen in, it was so much subdued that all fears for the safety of the surrounding houses were quieted.

'The performers, ■■■ the insurance offices, will be the greatest sufferers, for they have put themselves, ■ usual, ■ great expense in preparing for ■ season; many of them ■■ obliged ■ do this upon credit; but their ■■■ ending with the existence of the house, and before any of them had their benefit nights, they have now no ■■■ of extricating themselves from their difficulties.'

We learn from the Memoirs of Henry Angelo that the author's father was Master of the Ceremonies when the building was first opened for balls, &c. We quote ■ paragraph which well describes the final calamity:—

'The Pantheon was certainly the most elegant and beautiful structure that had been erected in the British metropolis. Shortly after the conflagration of the Opera House in the Haymarket, in the year 1789, the proprietors of ■ Pantheon, which had been deserted of late for Madame Corneilly's, in Soho, were all put into high spirits, as proposals were made ■ construct a theatre in the grand saloon there, and ■ transfer the performance of the Italian ballet and opera to ■ stage. No theatre ever, perhaps, opened with greater éclat. The pit, boxes, and gallery ■■ spacious, and magnificently fitted for ■ reception of ■ audience. The stage ■■ of vast extent, and no expense was spared ■ render the scenic and the wardrobe department splendid and grand ■ proportion ■ the spectacles announced. Their Majesties frequently visited ■■ new theatre, and everything ■■ proceeding with advantage ■ all concerned, when within a few months, one unfortunate night, ■■ noble monument of the genius of Wyatt ■■ consumed by the same destructive element, and that great architect ■■■■ the morrow, with indescribable grief, the entire ruin of that fond ■■■■■ of his youthful genius. The rising architects, too, were deprived of the ■■■ beautiful model ■■ modern ■■ had yet produced for their study.'

February 4, 1791. Chaos is Come Again. Qui capit inven., 1791. 1800. sec.
Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly.

Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast,
To soften bricks and bend the knotted oak.

The end of the Italian Opera performances, when the surveyors of Drury Lane Theatre had come to the conclusion that the old building required ■ be pulled down, is pictorially ■■ forth by ■■ artist in one ■■■ of general collapse and ruin. This print, for some undiscovered reason, is sometimes ■■ without the lettering; it was probably issued at the beginning of 1791 in that condition, and then published later with a date, which rather interferes with its purpose ■ intention, if it had ■■ appeared earlier, since the prospects of the Opera ■■■■ pany were reassured by the conversion of Wyatt's famous Pantheon into a theatre for their future ■■

We learn from a later paragraph (Gentleman's Magazine, September 1791) that the house in ■■ Haymarket was completed and opened for performances in the autumn of the year—a rival speculation ■ the successful ■ which inaugurated the adaptation of the magnificent and unfortunate monument in Oxford Street ■ ■ theatre.

CHAOS IS COME AGAIN.

'Thursday, September 22, 1791.—The Drury Lane company performed in the Opera House in the Haymarket. There ■ much clamour and ■ disturbance at first, owing to some inconveniences attending the alterations in the house, and chiefly the entrances, which, being soon got over, a ■ was introduced of Parnassus, which ■ painted and contrived in ■ very grand style; and Messrs. Dignum and Sedgwick sung the air. The Haunted Tower then began; and the audience, restored to good humour, honoured the performance with the loudest plaudits.'

January 31, 1791. Sheets of picturesque etchings:—A Four-in-Hand. The Village Dance. The Woodman Returning. River Scene. A Water Mill. Shipping, &c.

January 31, 1791. Huntsmen Visiting the Kennels. The Haymaker's Return. Deer in ■ Park. Cattle. Shepherds. Horses in ■ Paddock. Cattle Watering at ■ Pond. A Piggery. Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly.

1791. Traffic (old Jew clothesmen). Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.

January 30, 1791. Toxophilites. (See 1794.) Published by E. Harding.

March 1, 1791. The Attack. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.—A gentleman, who ■ driving four horses harnessed to a sort of curricule, with an elegant and fashionably-dressed female by his side, is thrown into consternation by the sudden apparition of a mounted knight of the road, who, seated ■ a high-mettled steed, ■ presenting ■ pistol ■ at the driver. The traveller's servant, dressed in his livery, and mounted on a cob, is brought up suddenly by the stopping of his master's vehicle; his face indicates the greatest astonishment at the demeanour of the highwayman and alarm at the unforeseen danger to which his patron is exposed; it does not, however, ■ to him to render any assistance.

March 22, 1791. Bardolph Badger'd, or the Portland Hunt.—Sheridan, with G. P. on his collar, is, in this instance, represented ■ the hunted cur; he has certain plans tied to his tail, and he is tearing off from the Duke of Portland's mansion (the great rallying-place among the leaders of the Whig party); 'Sherry' is escaping towards Carlton House, to take refuge with his ■ master; Fox is clapping his hands to accelerate Bardolph's speed; the Duke of Portland is throwing bundles of papers after the badgered fugitive; Burke is threatening him with his skelairy; Lord Holland is aiming ■ stick at him, and a crowd of other political celebrities belonging ■ the party are assisting to drive out the frightened ■ from their midst. In spite of his brilliant abilities Sheridan did ■ reflect much credit on the party with which he had been allowed to ally himself. The Prince of Wales, the good faith of whose allegiance ■ no less equivocal, finally turned his back on his friends, while retaining the services of the Bardolph of the picture. 'Sherry's' party had good cause ■ regard him with distrust.

April 12, 1791. European Powers. An Imperial Stride. ■ by William Holland, 50 Oxford Street.—Some doubt exists as ■ the authorship of this and the following political satires; there ■ several similar plates by Kingsbury, who ■ working for W. Holland ■ this date, but, from certain points in their execution, we are inclined ■ include one or two of these prints with the series by Rowlandson. The Empress Catherine, in her 'Imperial Stride,' has ■ foot resting ■ Russia, and the other touching the crescent above the dome of St. Sophia, in Constantinople. The various sovereigns of Europe are regarding this acrobatic performance with wonderment. Stanislaus the Second is reflecting on the 'length to which power may be carried;' Pope Pius the Sixth is declaring that 'he shall never forget it;' Charles the Fourth of Spain is threatening that he will 'despoil the spoiler!' Louis the Sixteenth 'never saw anything like it!' George the Third is saying, 'What, what, what ■ prodigious expansion!' the Emperor Leopold the Second, is remarking that it ■ ■ 'wonderful elevation!' and the Sultan, Selim the Third, is expressing his belief that 'all Turkey would not satisfy the ambition of the Empress.'

April 25, 1791. The Grand Battle between the famous English Cock and Russian Hen.—As ■ remarked, in treating of the previous print, some doubt, may exist as ■ the authorship of these plates; ■ have included ■ reduction of this engraving among ■ illustrations, so that ■ readers may be enabled ■ form their ■ impressions.

These cartoons ■ not without interest, ■ they offer ■ fair view of the relative positions of European sovereigns at the period of their publication.

King George the Third and the Empress Catherine of Russia are matched against one another in the great European cockpit for ■ decisive struggle—such a conflict as has been imminent under nearly similar conditions ■ various ■ agencies since 1791. The Great Powers are assembled to witness the encounter, and are backing their respective champions. The Empress, who is game ■ the last, is declaring, 'I have vanquished many a finer bird than you!' King George is retorting, 'Boo, boo; bluster, bluster! won't leave you ■ feather!' Queen Charlotte has ■ pile of money before her, which she is guarding from straggling fingers; she is holding ■ laurel wreath—held out on the end of the regal sceptre—over the head of her champion bird, and offering ■ wager 'a million to ten thousand' ■ his chances of victory. The Lord Chancellor Thurlow, who, although he was reckoned 'the wisest of men,' perpetually ■ promised his prospects by his anxiety to make his ■ future ■ the sacrifice of consistency, is inclined to put his 'ratting' principles into practice:

THE GRAND BATTLE BETWEEN THE FABLES ENGLISH COCK AND RUSSIAN HEN.

'She looks ■ if she wasn't afraid of any cock in Europe. I won't bet a penny!' Pitt, seated beside his sovereign, is crying, 'I should like ■ have ■ bout with her, but I'm afraid she'd soon do my business!' The King of Prussia ■ every confidence in his champion: 'Two hundred thousand rix-dollars the cock wins!' The Prince of Wales is entering into the sport: 'I wish they'd let my bird encounter her; he'd soon lower her crest; ten thousand she turns tail!' The Grand Seigneur is striking his Grand Vizier, and declaring to ■ female favourite who is leaning ■ his shoulder, 'If the cock wins, by ■ holy Prophet, I ■ he shall be cherished in ■ seraglio as long as he lives!' The King of Spain is remarking, 'It is easy ■ by her spunk Potemkin has been her feeder!' The Emperor of Austria's pocket-book ■ empty. Catherine's favourite, Potemkin, full of valorous confidence, is encouraging his Empress: 'A million roubles she'll win! At him again, my dear mistress! Potemkin, your invincible feeder, will back you ■ the last.' Louis the Sixteenth of France, whose ■ has dwindled down ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ trinket, is falling into raptures of admiration ■ ■ ■ the Russian hen : 'I would give all that I have left of ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ for such a glorious bird !'

A LITTLE TIGHTER.

May 16, 1791. The Volcano of Opposition. Rowlandson (?).

May 17, 1791. The Ghost of Mirabeau and Dr. Price Appearing to ■ ■ ■ Loyola. Rowlandson (?).

May 18, 1791. A Little Tighter. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly. —The picture tells its ■ ■ ■ story. A ladies' tailor has brought home a pair of stays for ■ corpulent dowager. The process of investing her ladyship in her new corsage seems ■ demand ■ enormous exertion of muscular vigour.

DAMP SHEETS.

May 18, 1791. A Little Bigger. (Companion print.)—The principal figure in this plate ■ that of ■ corpulent individual, who ■ being measured by ■ meagre whipper-snapper anatomy of a tailor ; the girth of his portly client is giving the knight of the needle ■ slight difficulty ■ surround his person with his measuring-tape, and the customer is impressing on ■ tailor the necessity of leaving ample room for his obese proportions.

1791. Cold Broth and Calamity. (See 1792.)

August 1, 1791. Housebreakers. (See 1788.) Published by S. W. Fores.

August 1, 1791. Damp Sheets. Drawn and etched by T. Rowlandson ; aquainta by T. Malton.—A gentleman, who is evidently on ■ travels, ■ thrown into ■ state of the most furious indignation on arriving at the discovery, as he is retiring to rest, that he and his wife have been put into a bed with damp sheets; the lady is wringing the moisture from the offending linen, and the husband is dancing about, gesticulating in frantic fashion and shaking his list in the [] of a pretty servant-maid, who, replying to the summons of the injured guests, is bustling [] with the warming-pan in her hand, believing her services are required [] direction.

August 12, 1791. English Barracks. Aquatinted by T. Malton. Published by S. W. Fores.—A view of the interior of a cavalry barracks, reproducing a scene more properly indicative of domestic than of military life, although weapons and accoutrements are scattered about. Drums and guns are piled in one corner; [] the window [] a trooper en négligé employed in brushing [] uniform. A woman [] nursing a strapping boy, while a soldier [] her side, in complete uniform, is adjusting his helmet [] the looking-glass. Another trooper [] child in [] and [] putting a lad, who [] playing [] soldiers, through his musketry exercise; while a pretty maiden [] presiding [] the washing-tub. An old grandmother, who is giving a playful infant a ride on her back, [] pouring [] glass of cordial for another warrior, whose toilette [] far from complete. Guns, sabres, military saddles, pistol-holsters, and other warlike objects are hung on the wall, giving the apartment, which is otherwise [] enough, a certain air of picturesque decoration.

August 12, 1791. French Barracks. (Companion [] the above.)—The interior of a French barracks offers a perfect [] the simplicity [] decorous order which mark the occupants of [] English Barracks. The barrack-room is extensive, and handsomely decorated with trophies of [], which, with a suit of mail, are disposed [] the walls with a good [] effect. The officers [] rising and dressing for morning parade. An officer, the principal features of whose countenance are absorbed in a pair of huge moustachios, is seated on the regimental drum, while a pretty girl [] employed unromantically in trimming the warrior's toenails. A soldier-barber [] the [] time dressing the hero's locks and binding up [] pigtail, [] reaches over a yard in length—a standard of valour of protracted dimensions. A lad [] bringing [] well-attended son of Mars his [] jack-boots, of a size and weight to displace the great [] of his battery with considerable effect. All these dandy warriors seem [] be utterly dependent [] the assistance of their factotums; it [] difficult [] imagine these 'curled darlings' in connection with gunpowder and a field of battle. A second officer [] enveloped in [] powdering-gown, while his barber-valet [] smothering him with volumes of violet-clouds from his puffing apparatus. Another hero [] reluctant [] morning slumbers; he [] seated, in his shirt, gaping frightfully, on the [] of his bed. One distinguished being [] almost completed [] elaborate toilette; [] due adjustment of [] lace [] and [] engaging [] exclusive attention; he is standing in front of a large mirror to perform [] manipulation with proper effect, and a very beautiful girl—whose [] toilette [] neglected, and whose voluptuous charms are freely exposed—is holding a second glass at the warrior's back, that he may be enabled to contemplate the reflection of his own admired self in the larger mirror; meanwhile one of his petty officers is standing at the salute, ready to receive the orders of his chief. A pretty woman, a young mother, is suckling an infant; and another child, whose wardrobe is limited to a single garment, is, while eating breakfast, training a poodle to stand at ease with a sword in his paw—a ridiculous parody of the warlike accompaniments around.

SLUGS IN A SAWPIT.

October 28, 1791. Slugs in a Sawpit. Published by S. W. Fores, in Piccadilly.—A brace of heroes, naval and military, are endeavouring to adjust their differences by mutual appeal to arms; the combat, for the sake of retirement and convenience, is taking place at the bottom of a sawpit. It appears that the duel is of an obstinate nature; three or four broken swords are scattered around, and, honour not being yet satisfied, recourse has evidently been had to pistols, several of which (some dismantled), with balls, &c., are also thrown about the limited field of conflict. It seems the antagonists are implacable, as, after exchanging all these inconclusive passes and discharges, they are resorting finally to ■■■ of ■ pair of huge blunderbusses, about the dimensions of fieldpieces, which would hold ■■■ pounds of slugs. The old Commodore is stooping his fat body, and the military buck is resting ■■■ knee, in order ■ get the ■■■ weapons into comfortable positions for firing; both combatants look ■ trifle nervous, as the results are likely to be tolerably marked ■ such ranges; the guns of the inveterate duellists are side by side, the stocks resting ■ their respective shoulders and the muzzles just touching their ■■■ The ■■■ quences likely ■ ■■■ ■ pulling the triggers ■■■ be easily imagined. A workman has just arrived ■ the edge of his sawpit in time ■ discover the trespasses these ferocious fire-eaters ■■ making ■ his property.

November 22, 1791. How to Escape Winning.—A pictorial satire directed against ■ famous incident of the turf, which provoked ■ unusual amount of attention and scandalous comments in proportion; the question never having been satisfactorily disposed of, although it has been generally received that the Prince of Wales, who owned the notorious racehorse Escape, ■■■ more sinned against than sinning. It is sufficient ■ mention that the horse in question, from certain circumstances which became a subject of vexed debate long after the occurrence, did not win the race, when it was pretty evident, under fair conditions of horse-racing, that he could have distanced every horse ■ the course. In the print—which is the chief point we have to deal with—the race is being run; the other jockeys are making great efforts to get ahead; the Prince's jockey, Chiffney, on Escape, is holding in his mount; the horse is furious at the restraint which is crippling him and preventing his running freely, the animal's ■■■ fore-leg being secured to his off hind-leg with the owner's Order of the Garter, 'Honi soit qui mal y pense.' The figure of a sporting character, intended either for that of the owner ■ trainer of this unlucky Escape, is standing with his finger to his nose, ■ action implying that he has made it all right for himself. In the distance the backers of the Prince's horse ■■■ either regarding the ■■■ with suspicion ■ ■■ stamping with rage ■ the fraud by which they ■■ doomed to lose instead of winning their money.

November 22, 1791. How to Escape Losing.—The principal figure is standing in much the ■■■ style of 'knowing' attitude as that displayed in the previous plate. The ■■■ is still being run; Escape is leading, the garter, Qu'en pensez-vous, only remains attached to the near fore-leg; but the horse's chances ■■ borne down by heavy impediments; a pair of weights ■■ slung ■■■ the jockey's shoulders and other weights ■■ suspended round the horse's neck and in front of and behind his saddle.

1791. Angelo's Fencing Rooms. (From Reminiscences of Henry Angelo, with Memoirs of his Friends, &c.)—'For ■■■ years I had ■ fencing-room ■ the Opera House, Haymarket, ■■■ the ■■■ of the pit-door. On the evening of June 17, 1789, about eight o'clock, when in Berkeley Square, I ■■■■ black smoke ascending; and ■■■■ hearing that there ■■■■ fire in the Haymarket, I directly hastened there, when, ■■■■ my surprise, I beheld the Opera House in flames. Having the key of my ■■■■ in my pocket, and the crowd making way for me, I ■■■■ got there, ■■■■ the time the back part ■■■■ burning. I first secured the portrait of Monsieur Saint George (the famous fencer), which hung ■■■■ the chimney-piece and removed it to St. Alban's Street, where I then resided. At my return, though I ■■■■ not absent six minutes, the mob had rushed in and plundered the ■■■■ of everything. As to the foils, jackets, &c., they were of little value to me compared to what I had in my closet—a portfolio of beautiful drawings, particularly several valuable ■■■■ of Cipriani, also of Mortimer, Rowlandson, &c., the loss of which I much regretted; but consoled myself by saving Saint George's picture, which he sat purposely for and offered me, after ■■■■ fencing together, the second day of his arrival in the country. It was painted by Brown, ■■■■ American artist, much encouraged here ■■■■ the time. The last day of his sitting he dined at my father's, when, my mother enquiring of him if it ■■■■ a good likeness, he smiled and replied (he ■■■■ a Creole), 'Oh, madame, c'est si ressemblant que c'est affreux.' My room, which ■■■■ in the front, ■■■■ the only one saved from the flames in the whole house; and fortunately, the engines being placed in it, prevented the fire from communicating to Market Lane.

'Sergeant Leger ■■■■ ■■■■ excellent fencer of the première force, whose elegant figure and mildness of manners greatly influenced the amateurs of the science. Though he was only in the ranks, his presence in every fencing-room ■■■■ ■■■■ ceptable, and when Saint George was his antagonist the match ■■■■ failed ■■■■ excite attention.

Fencing.—'In 1785 Monsieur Le Brun, ■■■■ celebrated fencing-master ■■■■ Paris, visited England. My academy in the Haymarket being then the general rendezvous for all the foreigners who ■■■■ either masters ■■■■ amateurs of the science, and near the coffee-house, their usual resort, he paid ■■■■ a visit. I ■■■■ his first antagonist. I soon found out, as the pugilists call it, that he was a "good customer" (a queer one to deal with); ■■■■ much so, that, however I might have distinguished myself before my scholars with the number of fencing-masters, &c. whom I have opposed, here I had nothing to boast of.

'I should observe that he was a left-handed fencer, and in full exercise in Paris, and of course he must have been daily in the habit of fencing with many, while in the ■■■■ of years I might not ■■■■ with six of superior force. Finding such ■■■■ excellent competitor, and as I thought that ■■■■ would be beneficial ■■■■ my scholars ■■■■ themselves ■■■■ practise against a left-handed fencer, I told him he would be welcome ■■■■ us all.'

Henry Angelo, who held the highest opinion of St. George, ■ drawn up the following ■■■■■ of his accomplishments :—

'The Chevalier de St. George was born ■ Gaudaloupe. He was ■ son of M. de Boulogne, a rich planter in the colony. His mother ■ ■ negress, and ■ known under the ■■■■ of the "handsome Nanon;" she ■ justly considered ■ of the finest ■■■■ that Africa had ■ sent to the plantations. The Chevalier de St. George united in his ■ person the grace and the features of his mother with the strength and firmness of M. de Boulogne. No man ever united so much suppleness ■ so much strength. He excelled in all the bodily exercises in which he engaged; ■ excellent swimmer and skater, he has been frequently known to swim over the Seine with one arm, and ■ surpass others by his agility upon its surface in the winter. He ■ a skilful horseman and a remarkable shot—he rarely missed his aim, when his pistol was once before the mark; his talents in music unfolded themselves rapidly: his concertos, symphonies, quartettos, and ■ comic operas ■ the best proofs of his extraordinary progress in music. Though he ■ very young he ■ the head of the concert of amateurs: he conducted the orchestras of Madame de Montesson and the Marquis de Montalembert.

'But the art in which he surpassed ■ his contemporaries and predecessors was fencing; ■ professor ■ amateur ■ showed ■ much accuracy, such strength, such length of lunge, and such quickness; his attacks ■ ■ perpetual series of hits—his parade so close that it ■ in vain to attempt to touch him; in short, he ■ all nerve.

'In the summer of the year 1787, on returning to my residence in St. Alban's Street, I ■ surprised at the appearance of lights and ■ crowd of people entering Mr. Rheda's fencing academy; ■ enquiry I ■ informed that the Chevalier St. George had arrived in England, and was about to exhibit his great talents ■ that place. I immediately went in and renewed my ■ acquaintance with him; and as it is customary for fencing-masters of celebrity ■ engage with each other at such meetings, I proposed myself, and ■ accepted ■ the first professor who engaged with him in this country.

'It may not be unworthy to remark that, from his being much taller, and consequently possessing ■ greater length of lunge, I found I could ■ depend upon my attacks with sufficient confidence unless I closed with him; the consequence ■ upon my adopting that ■■■■■ the hit which I gave ■ ■ "palpable," that it "threw open his waistcoat," which ■ enraged him that, in his fury, I received ■ blow from the pommel of the foil on my chin, the mark of which I still retain as a souvenir of having engaged with the first fencer in Europe.

'It may be remarked of this celebrated man, that although he might be ■

sidered as a lion with a foil in his hand, yet, the contest over, he was as docile as a lamb; for soon after the engagement, when seated ■ rest himself, he ■■ me, "Mon cher ami, donnez-moi votre main, ■■ tirons tous les jours ensemble."

On leaving this country the Chevalier St. George presented Mr. Angelo with his portrait by Mather Brown, his fencing-foil, glove, and jacket, which ■■ hung up in the ■■■■ rented by Angelo over the Opera portico (Haymarket).

Among the competitors in these fencing assaults, which ■■ patronised by the Prince of Wales, and ■■ sometimes held at Carlton House, are mentioned the names of D'Eon, M. Fabian, M. Magé (who ■■ reckoned second ■ M. St. George among the amateurs of Paris), M. Sainville, Mr. Rheda, Mr. Mola, and Mr. Angelo, Sen.

1791. A Four-in-Hand.

1791. The Inn Yard ■ Fire. Drawn and etched by T. Rowlandson; aquatinted by T. Malton.—Dover, Deal, Margate, and Canterbury Coaches.—Fires at inns ■■ by no means exceptional occurrences, if we may trust contemporary novelists; and who could have seized the changeful scenes of life flitting around them with such humour and fidelity as Fielding and the followers of his genial, life-like school have arrived at? Their fictitious personages, ■ Thackeray has argued, have often ■■ vitality than those of actual history.

Everyone who ■■ not content ■ live and die in one spot—the little space whereon they ■■ born—must, at one time or another, have given way ■ the incentive of travel; all the world, high and low, aristocratic ■ mercantile, must, in the ■■ of journeys in the pursuit of pleasure, variety, scenery, health, gain, ■ from necessity, from spot to spot, have encountered the humours of an inn; since the slow-going waggon, or the inevitable 'machine,' which, in ■ later generation, was supplanted by the flying stage-coach (itself, ■ judged by the present system of transport, ■ very tedious, insupportable affair, according ■ modern ideas—a serious and solitary ■■ of travelling), and the various eccentric methods of locomotion indulged in a century back, rendered frequent 'puttings up' ■ posting-houses in ■ measure unavoidable. A traveller in the good old days when Fielding and Smollett noted down their pictures of life ■■ almost bound ■■ adventures of one sort ■ another. There was the excitement of the start, the difficulty of securing comfort in the article of seats, and sociability in the way of companionship; the dangers of the environs of London—the heaths, where the mail was always liable ■ be arrested ■ the wayward will of the pleasant and popular Mr. Richard Turpin, on his equally well-bred 'Black Bess,' ■ ■ the hands and holsters of less famous and ruder professional contemporaries; the risk of the roads; the digging of the great lumbering Noah's Ark from soft ways and quagmires ; capsizing, ■ being snowed up, and such ■ tualities. ■ roads, disagreeable comrades, ■ stuffy inside place, or ■ moist outside 'shake-down,' ■ intervals relieved by the arrival of the cortège ■ hospitable hostelry, with its vast rambling galleries and its commodious courtyard, where further adventures were ■ unlikely ■ attend the voyager.

Who'er has travell'd life's dull round,
Through all its various paths hath been,
Must oft have wondered to have found
His warmest welcome ■ an inn !

INN YARD ■ FIRE.

The ardent house-warming prepared for the passengers at the Inn Yard ■ Fire barely justifies the rapture of the rhymers. From the notice-board ■ find the Dover, Deal, Margate, and Canterbury Coaches ■ advertised to ■ out from the caravansary in question. The strangers are rudely disturbed, while the flames are lapping the old building and serpentineing their way round the inflammable wooden balconies, ■ the suddenly awakened inmates take to flight with such solitary articles as ■ first ■ hand. Peregrine is rescuing Emilia much as Rowlandson has drawn that worthy in his illustration ■ the exciting situation of the fire ■ ■ inn yard. (See The Adventures of Peregrine Pickle, chapter xxvii.) A sufferer from gout is being conveyed in a wheelbarrow of imminent danger of roasting; an old dowager has appeared on the scene with a pair of leather breeches on her shoulders, recalling similar episodes in La Fontaine, Boccaccio, &c.; while a corpulent old boy has simply thrown a lady's quilted petticoat round his neck. A waggon and horses are being dragged off of the dangerous vicinity. From its contiguity to the French route between Dover and Calais the house is evidently frequented by foreigners lately landed on our shores, and the unexpected warmth of their reception is too much for the excitable Gauls. One Frenchman, an officer, is making good his escape; his personal wardrobe is sacrificed, but he has secured his most precious belongings, an umbrella, a sword, his jack-boots, and his wig and solitaire—wigs being in those days somewhat costly appendages. A compatriot by his side is endeavouring to make off with his worldly possessions, and is dragging a heavy portmanteau on his heels; this salvage is endangered by the suspicions of a bulldog, who is not to be shaken off; the animal is first stopping the box, and finally arresting the fugitive by seizing his long queue in his mouth, a mode of arrest against which the terrified Parlez-vous is unequal and unable to defend himself. An antiquated husband is holding a ladder for the escape of his pretty wife; the curmudgeon is furious that the personal attractions of his better half should be thus displayed to the less privileged males around, who are assisting her delicate descent. The dangers of the fire are increased by the reckless impulse characteristic of similar casualties, in which blazing objects are hurled out of window, spreading the flames to places which have hitherto escaped ignition. Mirrors and tables, sheets and other objects, are sent flying from the upper galleries to the heads of the scared travellers below. If the Squall in Hyde Park may be accepted as an ordeal by water, the Inn Yard on Fire must be acknowledged as an appropriate pendant. These plates were, it is believed, issued as a pair. Both are of the same size, etched by Rowlandson, and aquatinted by T. Malton; the execution is spirited in regards outline, and the tinting is most successfully and delicately carried out. The second print, A Squall in Hyde Park, is, the Editor has no doubt to believe, the scarcer of the two; a copy (proof) in the National Library, Paris, and the one in his collection, are the solitary examples with which he is acquainted. The Inn Yard on Fire is more familiarly known; and, although original impressions command prices which are seemingly fabulous, several impressions, of varying excellence, have come under the writer's attention.

1791. A Squall in Hyde Park. Drawn and etched by T. Rowlandson; aquatinted by T. Malton.—The fashionable throngs which Rowlandson, with his marvellously faithful pencil, has so often drawn, disporting themselves in the paths of frivolity amidst the haunts of the ton, are viewed by him under a more excited aspect. The promenaders, in a state of sauve qui peut, are rushing off pell-mell in an attempt to preserve their dripping finery from the effects of a sudden thunderstorm. Doubtless A Squall in Hyde Park may occur frequently enough in ■■■ day, but the artist who proposes to lend his graphic powers ■■ delineate the episodes of such a stampede in the present generation would not have his eye for the picturesque gratified by the discovery of such grotesque elements as gratuitously lent themselves ■■ the appreciative caricaturist ■ century back. Rowlandson's animated ■■■■ successfully includes all the diversities of the situation. The park-gates ■■ crowded by the sudden exeruit omnes—pedestrians, horses, and carriages ■■ mixed in ■■ confused mass in the struggle to escape from ■■ miniature tempest. Peers and pedagogues, the man of fashion in search of gallant adventures, and the hypochondriac, limping parkwards ■■ take the air; the ignorant, new-fledged squire, the rustic dandy, whose head-dressing does not extend beyond the powdered and frizzed peruke, and the man of knowledge and philosophy, ■■ thrown into violent contact, and unexpectedly realise whose cranium is the hardest. The storm breaks, the black clouds gather and meet, down pours a very torrent, and the wind suddenly takes to blowing 'big guns;' hats, caps, and bonnets, wigs and head-gear generally, are sent flying off on independent excursions; the sport of the sudden squall, to the dismay of the bereaved owners; umbrellas of the period—still popular novelties, in substantiality very different to their genteel descendants—are without exception blown inside-out; feathers, which were worn of great height, splendour, and profusion, are moistened and dripping like weeping willows. The Prince of Wales, in 'blue and buff,' ■■ horseback, followed by his groom, is pushing forward for Carlton House; Lord Barrymore, in his lofty phaeton,¹ has to exert all his charioteering skill ■■ restrain his terrified and plunging high-mettled steeds; while the fair companion perched by his side, high over the heads of the humbler stream of struggling humanity, is complacently enjoying the spectacle of the dilemmas around her. Footmen ■■ dripping; naval and military heroes ■■ retreating; such hats ■■ have not been violently carried off are secured by handkerchiefs tied under the chin, ■■ held ■■ by main force; petticoats ■■ turned ■■■■ shoulders. The spectacle of confusion ■■ fairly completed by an unfortunate slip, which has left the person of the unhappy victim ■■ stumbling-block for the general capsizing of the hurried file which is following in his footsteps. A sturdy old admiral, in ■■ advanced stage of corpulence, is rather enjoying the opportunity, ■■ which the ruffling winds are contributing, of viewing the points of the dishevelled fair, and, spyglass in eye, like his Grace the notorious Peer of Piccadilly, he is quizzing the ankles and criticising the symmetry of the dainty belles before him; the long, gauze-like, and limp drapery in multitudinous folds then in vogue being exceptionally liable ■ come to grief under all such sinister emergencies. To add ■ the ■ of the flight, a fierce bulldog, irritated with the general condition of things, is taking exception ■ this universal attempt ■ escape, ■ indicating suspicion ■ his faithful mind; he is making darts ■ the passengers, and it will ■ hard with the fugitives he may take it into his head ■ arrest by the tension of his formidable teeth.

¹ 'Lord Barrymore's phaeton was a very high one; and after our midnight revels in ■■■ I have ■■■ ■■■ ■■■ ■■■ Wargrave. ■■■ very dark night, going through Colnbrook, in ■■■ long street ■■■ ■■■ Lane, ■■ kept whipping right and left, breaking, ■■■ windows, delighted with ■■■ as he heard ■■■ crack—this he called fanning the daylight.'—Angels's Memoirs.

Plates dated 1791-93 and 1795-96. The History of Tom Jones, a Foundling, by Henry Fielding, Esq. With prints by Rowlandson. Edinburgh and London (Longman ■ Co.), republished 1805.

VOLUME I.

Frontispiece, book i. c. iii. The Infant Jones found in the bed of Mr. Allworthy.

Book ii. c. iv. The astonished Partridge meets the vengeance of the whole sex (Partridge cruelly accused and maltreated by his wife).

Book iv. c. v. Tom Jones discovers the Philosopher Square in the Chamber of Moll Seagrim.

Book v. c. x. The constancy of Tom Jones subdued by meeting Molly Seagrim in the wood.

VOLUME II.

Book viii. c. xiv. Terror of the Sentinel ■ seeing Jones issue from the Chamber in search of Northerton.

Book ix. c. ii. Tom Jones rescues Mrs. Waters from the violence of Northerton.

■ ix. c. iii. Battle of Upton; Tom Jones and the Landlord, Partridge and Susan, Mrs. Waters and the Landlady.

Book xi. c. ii. Sophia's modesty shocked by a fall from her horse.

VOLUME III.

Book xiii. c. ii. Tom Jones refused admittance by the porter at the door of ■ Irish peer.

Book xiii. c. ii. Jones and Sophia interrupted in ■ l'île-à-l'île by Lady Bellaston.

Book xiv. c. ii. Partridge interrupts Tom Jones in his protestations ■ Lady Bellaston.

Book ■ c. 5. Lord Fellamar rudely dismissed by Squire Western.

1791-93, 1795-96. The Adventures of Peregrine Pickle; in [] are included Memoirs of a Lady of Quality. By T. Smollett, M.D. [] plates by Rowlandson. Edinburgh and London (Longman): 1805.

Chap. xxvii. Fire [] the Inn. Peregrine Rescues Emilia, &c.

Chap. xlv. Feast after the Manner of the Ancients.

1791. Délices [] la Grande-Bretagne. Engraved and published by William Birch, enamel painter, Hampstead Heath. Two illustrations by Rowlandson. Dover Castle; with the setting off of the Balloon to Calais, in January 1785. Market Day at Blandford, Dorsetshire.

1792.

January 1792. St. James's—St. Giles's. H. Wigstead, invt. Published by T. Rowlandson, Strand; and republished (1794) by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.—The parish of St. James's is represented by two modish frail nymphs, elegantly decked out in the Frenchified fashion of the period; their profuse locks spread forth, frizzed and powdered, in the style imported from Paris by Mrs. Fitzherbert; the refinement of their appearance ill accords with a bowl of punch which they are convivially sharing. The ruder precincts of St. Giles's are pictured in the persons of two coarse, overgrown females of the 'fishfag' and 'street ballad singing' order, swaggering with sufficient impudence to set the universe at defiance.

January 1792. Oddities. Henry Wigstead, invt., January 1792. Published by T. Rowlandson, Strand. Republished 1794, by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.—A group of caricatured heads, types of expression and burlesqued peculiarities, in two prints, designed by Henry Wigstead, and engraved and published by Thomas Rowlandson.

February 22, 1792. The Bank. Published by T. Rowlandson, Strand.

February 22, 1792. Work for Doctors' Commons. Published by T. Rowlandson, Strand.—There is no evidence to prove this print directly proceeds from the pencil of Rowlandson, but there are indications of his style, both in the subject and in the execution; it is also in points suggestive of the early style of Morland. A lady and a captain—a pretty pair—are dallying on a sofa, while the superannuated lawful spouse of the frivolous fair is ensconced behind a screen, standing on a chair, and surveying the situation from the top of this buscade; his footman is watching by his side, impressed as a witness, and is struck with horror at the spectacle of domestic faithlessness, of which he is taking observations through a peephole made through the screen for the purpose of spying.

From a MS. is an impression which has been under the Editor's notice it is that the contemporary scandal relates to certain Mrs. Walsh and General Upton.

March 1792. A Dutch Academy. Published by T. Rowlandson, 52 Strand, 1792.—The caricature represents, as the title describes, the interior of ■ drawing school in Holland ; just such ■ one as may be found there ■ this day. A corpulent woman is sitting ■ ■ model ■ the painters, in an attitude more easy than graceful. The Mynheers ■■ clustered around, ■■■ of the students, ■■■ of whom are advanced in life, and of clumsy, corpulently developed figures, ■■ seated ■■ tubs, others ■■ squatting on the floor, and nearly all ■■ smoking. The Dutchmen, who ■■ of the conventional type—much ■ ■ find them pictured in the veracious Knickerbocker's famous History of New York, closely encased in buttoned-up jackets, and roomy nether garments—are plodding away at their studies ; some few ■■ too interested ■ do anything beyond indulging in ■ stolid contemplation of the charms of their material Venus.

April 1, 1792. A Lying-in Visit, or a Short-sighted Mistake. Published by S. W. Fores.—There are various versions of this subject, which it seems ■■ originally suggested by Newton. Several of his contemporaries have tried their hand ■ it. A small version of the print is due to Rowlandson, and it evidently found favour in its day. A purblind and antiquated spinster, decked ■■ in the very height of the fashion of the day—recalling the artist's suggestive Old Ewe dressed Lamb Fashion—is supposed to have called on a visit of congratulation ■ ■ young wife who has recently been deserving well of her country, by increasing its population. An old footman, with ■ powdered head, ■ bringing in ■ scuttle of coals ; the gushing visitor, who was prepared to go into promiscuous raptures in anticipation, is advancing to embrace the scuttle, which she imperfectly distinguishes, fulsomely exclaiming ■■ the consternation of John Thomas, who ■ lost in confusion :—'O you pretty creature ! Bless the dear baby, how it smiles ! Give it ■ me, Nurse ! It has exactly its Papa's ■■ and Mama's eyes ! Oh, it is ■ delightful little creature !'

May 29, 1791-2. Six Stages of Marring ■ Face—dedicated with respect to the Duke of Hamilton. A companion ■ the Six Stages of mending ■ Face.—Stage the first represents the prize fighter (in the days when pugilistic exhibitions were specially given under the patronage of noblemen such ■ the Duke of Hamilton), in all his muscular force, stripped for the contest, his face ■■ disfigured and manly, as left by nature ; in stage the second, one eye is closed ; in stage the third he is much disfigured ; in the latter stages the shape is entirely beaten out of his features, until the champion is left, in stage the sixth, ■ hideous mass of bruises, cuts, and bleeding wounds, hammered out of all resemblance ■ his former self—a spectacle sufficiently revolting to act as ■■ antidote ■ the morbid excitement and attractiveness of the prize ring. It is worthy of remark that the artist ■■ have drawn this print, exposing the barbarity of the ring, from sheer conviction founded ■ his ■■ observations, and ■■ from any squeamish distaste for the sport ; Rowlandson ■■ enjoyed a wide experience of athletic exercises, in which he was understood ■ excel, and attended numerous ■■■ pugilistic encounters, amateur and professional, in his time; his pleasure in drawing well-built figures, with the play of muscle which would be exhibited in the ■■■■ of 'bouts at fisticuffs' such as he had both the power and skill ■■■■ delineate, proves that he had ■■■■ decided predilection for the science, apart from its reprehensible brutalities. It further appears that the artist ■■■■ somewhat of ■■■■ boxer.

May 29, 1791-2. Six Stages of Mending ■■■■ Face. Dedicated with respect ■■■■ the Right Honorable Lady Archer. Published by S. W. Fores, ■■■■ Piccadilly. — This plate traces the progress of manufacturing ■■■■ beauty ■■■■ mode. The first stage introduces the fair ■■■■ in a very dilapidated condition, and the materials from which the lady is ■■■■ be reconstructed do not ■■■■ promising. A handkerchief ■■■■ tied ■■■■ her head ■■■■ remedy the scarcity of hair; ■■■■ eye is absent, and the gums ■■■■ toothless. A handsome glass eye is being adjusted in stage the second. Stage the third represents the crowning of the shaven pate with ■■■■ luxuriant and fashionably dressed head of hair. An artificial set of teeth ■■■■ being placed in the lady's mouth in the next stage. The lady ■■■■ approaches an appearance of youth and beauty. In stage five she supplies the roses, hitherto absent from her cheeks, with a hare's foot and rouge. Stage six pictures the completed work, a dashing and captivating belle, with fine eyes (not necessarily ■■■■ perfect pair it is true), flowing, profuse, and becoming locks of hair, perfect teeth, blooming complexion, and a carriage of conscious grace and coquetry.

June, 1792. Ruins of the Pantheon—after the Fire which happened January 14, 1792. Sketched by Rowlandson and Wigstead. Published by T. Rowlandson, Strand. Pantheon.—'Persons who witnessed the progress of this tremendous fire declare that the appearances exhibited through the windows, the lofty scagliola pillars enveloped in flames and smoke, the costly damask curtains waving from the rarefaction of the air, and the superb chandeliers turning round from the ■■■■ circumstance, together with the successive crashing and falling in of different portions of the building, furnished ■■■■ their minds a more lively representation of Pandemonium than the imagination alone can possibly supply. The effects too of the intense frost which then prevailed, ■■■■ the ■■■■ poured from the engines upon the blazing pile, ■■■■ described as equally singular and magnificent.' J. B. Papworth.

1792. The Chairman's Terror: Leaving a Levée, St. James's Palace. Published by T. Rowlandson, 52 Strand.

The Adventures of Roderick Random. Roderick Random is conducted by his uncle Tom Bowling ■■■■ a visit to his grandfather, the judge.—'After ■■■■ few minutes' pause ■■■■ ■■■■ admitted, and conducted ■■■■ my grandfather's chamber through a lane of my relations, who honoured ■■■■ with very significant looks as I passed along. When we came into the judge's presence, my uncle, after ■■■■ ■■■■ three sea-bows, expressed himself in this ■■■■ "Your servant—your [redacted] What cheer father? what cheer? I suppose you don't know me—mayhap you don't. My name [redacted] Tom Bowling; and this here boy—you look as if you did [redacted] know him neither—'tis [redacted] you mayn't. He's [redacted] rigged, i' faith; his cloth don't shake in the wind so much [redacted] it [redacted] [redacted] do. 'Tis my nephew, d'ye [redacted] Roderick Random—your [redacted] flesh and blood, old gentleman. Don't lay astarn, you dog" (pulling me forward). My grandfather, who [redacted] [redacted] up with the gout, received his relation after his long absence with [redacted] coldness of civility which [redacted] peculiar [redacted] him; told him he [redacted] glad [redacted] see him, and desired him to sit down. "Thank ye, thank ye, sir, I had as lief stand," said my uncle. "For my own part I desire nothing of you; but if you have any conscience [redacted] all, do something for this poor boy, who has been used [redacted] a very unchristian rate. Unchristian, do you call it? I [redacted] the Moors in Barbary have more humanity than to leave their [redacted] [redacted] want. I would fain know why my sister's [redacted] is [redacted] neglected than that there fair-weather Jack" (pointing to the young squire, who, with the [redacted] of my cousins, had followed [redacted] into the room). "Is [redacted] he [redacted] akin to you as the other? Is [redacted] he much handsomer, and better built than that great chucklehead? Come, ■■■ sider, old gentleman, you are going ■■■ short time to give an account of your evil actions. Remember the wrongs you ■■■ his father, and make all the satisfaction in your power before it is too late. The least thing you ■■■ do is ■■■ settle his father's portion on him." The young ladies who thought themselves ■■■ much concerned ■■■ contain themselves any longer, ■■■ up their throats altogether against my protector, "Scurvy companion—saucy tarpaulin—rude, impertinent fellow—did he think he was going to prescribe ■■■ grandpapa? His sister's brat had been ■■■ well taken care of; grandpapa ■■■ too just ■■■ make ■■■ difference between ■■■ unnatural, rebellious ■■■ and his dutiful loving children, who took his advice in ■■■ things"—and such expressions ■■■ vented against him with great violence, until the judge ■■■ length commanded silence.

[redacted] CAUSE [redacted] HIS [redacted]

THE ■■■■ THE WAGGON ARRIVING ■■■ THE ■■■

The Adventures of Roderick Random. Chap. XI.—Roderick Random, ■■■ his companion Strap, having alighted from the waggon, ■■■ standing ■■■ little back in the best ■■■ of the Inn, where the landlord, candle ■■■ hand, ■■■ receiving the [redacted] of the guests, who are entering from the conveyance; Joey, the honest driver of the waggon, is standing behind the obsequious Boniface. Roderick Random thus pursues his narrative :—

'Here I had an opportunity of viewing the passengers in order as they entered. The first who appeared [redacted] a brisk airy girl about twenty years old, with a silver laced hat on her head instead of a cap, a blue stuff riding-suit trimmed with silver, very much tarnished, and a whip in her hand. After her came limping [redacted] old man, with a worsted nightcap buttoned under his chin, and a broad brimmed hat slouched over it, and an old rusty blue cloak tied about his neck, under which appeared a brown surtout that covered a threadbare coat and waistcoat, and, as [redacted] afterwards discerned, a dirty flannel jacket. His eyes [redacted] hollow and bleared, his face was shrivelled into a thousand wrinkles, his gums were destitute of teeth, his [redacted] sharp and drooping, his chin peaked and prominent, [redacted] that when he mumped or spoke, they approached one another like a pair of nutcrackers; he supported himself on an ivory headed cane, and his whole figure [redacted] a just emblem of winter, famine, and avarice. But how [redacted] I surprised when I beheld the formidable captain in the shape of a little thin creature, about the age of forty, with a long withered visage very much resembling that of a baboon, through the upper part of which two little grey eyes peeped: he wore his [redacted] hair in a queue that reached [redacted] his rump, which immoderate length I suppose [redacted] the occasion of a baldness that appeared [redacted] the crown of his head, when he deigned [redacted] take off his hat, which [redacted] very much of the size and cock of Pistol's. Having laid aside his great coat, I could not help admiring the extraordinary make of this [redacted] of [redacted] he was about five feet and three inches high, sixteen inches of which went [redacted] his face and long scraggy neck; his thighs [redacted] about six inches in length, his legs resembling spindles [redacted] drumsticks, two feet and a half, and his body, which put me in mind of extension without substance, engrossed the remainder, so that on the whole he appeared like a spider or grasshopper erect, and [redacted] almost [redacted] et praterca nihil. His dress consisted of a frock of what is called bear-skin, the skirts of which [redacted] about half a foot long, an hussar waistcoat, scarlet breeches reaching halfway down his thighs, worsted stockings rolled up almost to his groin, and shoes with wooden heels [redacted] least two inches high; he carried a sword very near [redacted] long as himself in one hand, and with the other conducted his lady, who seemed to be a woman of his [redacted] age, and still retained [redacted] remains of a handsome person; but [redacted] ridiculously affected that, had I not been a novice in the world, I might have easily perceived in her the deplorable vanity and second-hand airs of a lady's woman.'

October 1, 1792. On Her Last Legs. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.

November 5, 1792. English Travelling, — the First Stage from Dover.
(See December, 1785)

November 5, 1792. French Travelling, — the First Stage from London.
(See December, 1785)

November 5, 1792. Studious Gluttons. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly.

Adventures of Joseph Andrews and his friend, Mr. A. Adams. By Henry Fielding. Illustrated by Rowlandson, 8vo

November 5, 1792. The Convocation. (See 1785.) Published by S. W.
Fores, Piccadilly.

1792. Philosophy — Mad, or ■ stupendous Monument of Human Wisdom.

ON HER LAST LEGS

Signed G. L. S.—As this print exhibits various indications of Rowlandson's handiwork, it has been thought advisable to include it amongst the present selection. The plate represents the general upset of affairs in France. On the wreck of a number of columns marked Humanity, Social Happiness, Security, Tranquillity, Domestic Peace, Laws, Order, Religion, Urbanity, &c., ■ balanced the ■ of the republic of France, or rather that of Paris. A Fury yelling ■ ira represents La République; in her hand is ■ picture of Religious Indifference graphically ■ forth as ■ auto ■ fe of Papish Bishops and Cardinals. Plenty ■ represented by ■ Fury extending her cornucopia of 'Assignats' ■ ■ group of hungry-looking half-starved Frenchmen. Peace is displayed firing a bomb marked A ■ of Offensive War; the gun carriage is inscribed Universal Benevolence; the Goddess of Order ■ blowing through ■ trumpet the tidings, Peace of Europe established.

Equality is travestied as ■ aristocrat kneeling ■ the dust, while ■ half-naked sansculotte ■ treading ■ his neck and beating his head with a club. Liberty is shown as a Jacobin, trampling on the Law, and holding the head of ■ Conventionalist on a dagger, to which the rulers of the ■ are compelled ■ bow their obeisance. Humility is parodied by ■ female monster holding up the heart of ■ martyr to the ■ religion.

GLUTTONY.

1792. The Grandpapa. Designed by H. Wigstead. (See January 1, 1784.)

1792. Cold Broth and Calamity.—This print has the reputation of being ■ unusually successful example of the artist's humorous powers of delineation, and the writer has ■ several original designs ■ the same subject by Rowlandson's hand; in ■ the drawings ■ larger and ■ important in character than the etching of Cold and Calamity; the subject seems have been a favourite one.

The scene represents the of one of the parks, or of a frozen river; in the foreground is a of grotesque confusion, the ice has given way, and a party of skaters have fallen through; heads, arms, and skate-bound feet waving the hole, through which a group of unfortunates engulfed. A little distance off the face of another unfortunate is thrust through a hole in the ice, wigless, and wearing the sort of alarm could conceive under the circumstances; while further half a face, with a wig and pig-tail attached, is visible, the of which evidently shouting for assistance. Other skaters are disporting themselves in the distance; they, too, getting themselves into difficulties. A parsonic-looking personage, in a full-bottomed wig, is falling forward, with the certainty of his body breaking through the ice: the upset of this capacious individual will involve a skater who is following him closely, whose hat and wig have already flown away from him. A party of snug old gentlemen in top-boots and ample great-coats enjoying the sufferings of their fellow-creatures, comfortably on the banks, and in the distance is seen a large tent for the accommodation of visitors.

1792. An Italian Family. (See A French Family, 1790.) Drawing exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1784.

November 5, 1792. The Hypochondriac. Designed by James Dunthorne; etched by T. Rowlandson; published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.

The Mind distemper'd—say, what potent charm,
Can Fancy's spectre—brooding disarm?
Physic's prescriptive assails in vain
The dreadful phantoms floating 'cross the brain!
Until, with Esculapian skill, the M.D.
Finds out length by self-taught palmistry
The hopeless case, in the reluctant fee;
Then, not in torture such wretch to keep,
One pitying bolus lays him sound asleep.

The Hypochondriac, forming a companion Ague and Fever (See March 29, 1788), is another instance of the difficulty of attempting to express mental and physical maladies by pictorial embodiments, the designer being one of the ingenious of the period, who had to more experienced professional hands work their conceptions into presentable shape, with, at least, some regard for the accepted of form, and a certain respect for the technicalities of execution. The Hypochondriac is seated in an arm-chair, in night-cap and slippers, and wrapped in a flannel dressing-gown, his arms are folded, and his head droops, in melancholy meditation, his chest; the expression of his features is moody in the extreme. By his side ■ an iron-clamped chest, ■ hint that the sufferer is somewhat tenacious of his wealth, although ■ life has otherwise become insupportably burdensome. Phantoms, and figurative horrors of various descriptions, ■ haunting the invalid's diseased mind. There is ■ dagger, like the sword of Damocles, trembling above his head. A grim skeleton of Death is, with grotesque energy, threatening ■ hurl his dart, as a release from life's fretful calamities. A corpse, with grave-clothes clinging to its ghastly frame, is proffering the ■■■■■ of making an untimely exit, by a rope or a pistol ■ choice; another phantom figure is setting the example of plunging headlong down ■ destruction; ■ goblin is offering a cup of poison; while a spectre, wearing the sufferer's ■■■■ image, is suggesting on his fictitious person the ease of cutting his throat. A hand with ■ drawn sword, ■ ghostly hearse, and heads of Medusa-like description, with furies, fates, &c, appear for the purpose of daunting the unsettled brain of the haunted Hypochondriac. A table ■ covered with Doctor's Stuff, and ■ well-fed and prosperous charlatan, in attendance on the distempered patient, is in consultation with ■ pretty waiting-maid, whose face and person give indications of the most flourishing health—a palpable ■ ■ the sufferer ■ whom she is retained ■ attend.

AN ITALIAN FAMILY.

HYPONCHOLIA.

November 25, 1792. Benevolence. Published by S. W. Fores.

1792. Botheration; ■ ■ to the Gentlemen of the Bar. (See 1785.)

December, 1792. The Contrast, 1792. Which is best? British Liberty, Religion, Morality, Loyalty, Obedience to the Laws, Independence, Personal Security, Justice, Inheritance, Protection, Property, Industry, National Prosperity, Happiness; ■

BEAUTIES.

French Liberty, Atheism, Perjury, Rebellion, Treason, Anarchy, Murder, Equality, Madness, Cruelty, Injustice, Treachery, Ingratitude, Idleness, Famine, National and Private Ruin, Misery?

A pair of medallions, designed by Lord George Murray, and ■ ■ by him ■ the Crown and Anchor, from whence they ■ ■ freely distributed; the style of the execution bears the strongest resemblance ■ Rowlandson's handiwork.

British Liberty ■ peaceful and flourishing; Britannia is seated under an oak, her arm resting on her shield; in one hand is the cap of Liberty, and Magna Charta, in the other the scales of Justice evenly balanced. The British Lion ■ ■ her feet; ■ ■ in the ■ ■ is the wide ocean, with British ships riding triumphant. The  this prospect is French Liberty; the genius of France  fury, serpents are twined round her head and waist, she is carrying flames and destruction in her progress; she is holding a dagger in  hand; in the other  pike,  which two human hearts and  head  impaled; her foot  trampling on the decapitated trunk of one of the victims to revolutionary frenzy. An aristocrat  shown in the background, hanging by the neck to  street lamp.

Sold by S. W. Fores (January 1, 1793), twenty-one shillings per hundred plain, two guineas coloured.

December 1, 1792. Beauties. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.

1793.

January 1, 1793. The Old Angel Inn at Islington. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.

January 8, 1793. Reform Advised: Reform Begun: Reform Complete. Published by J. Brown, 2 Adelphi.—Reform Advised: John Bull, in his comfortable easy chair, and wearing the homely and decent clothes of a well-to-do citizen, is seated beside his substantial fare of good roast beef and plum pudding, with his mug of 'home-brewed.' Three of the French reformers taking compassion upon his peaceful ignorance; they have come over from Paris expressly to convert him to the advantages of the new order of things. These tatterdemalions are hungry, ragged, and by no means prepossessing as regards their exteriors; and, while John Bull is attributing his comforts to the blessed effects of a good constitution, the sansculottes are taking considerable pains to bring him to a contrary conviction. The leader is offering him the cap of liberty and tricolor, and asserting: 'I am your friend, John Bull; you want reform;' his followers declare, 'My honourable friend speaks my sentiments;' and 'John Bull, you are too fat!'

Reform Begun discovers John Bull under altered circumstances; his broadcloth is all in tatters, he has a wooden leg, and is shoeless; in his hand is a frog, which he despairs of relishing: 'A pretty Reform, indeed; you have deprived me of my leg, and given me nothing but frogs to eat; I shall be starved; I am no Frenchman!' His three philosopher friends assume a more threatening aspect, and menace John Bull with bludgeons and daggers; the leader is crying: 'Eat it, you dog, and hold your tongue: you are very happy.' The others add: 'That's right, my friend, we will make him happier still!' and 'He is a little leaner!'

Reform Complete shows the national prototype thrown to the ground, and quite powerless under the results of the new régime: 'Oh, oh! French fraternity!' he is groaning, while the Reformers, flourishing their flaming incendiary torches, dance round his prostrate body: 'Oh, delightful! you may thank me, you dog, for sparing your life—thank me, I say!' 'Now he is quite happy—I will have a jump!'

1793. New Shoes. Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly. (Republished 1804.)—The interior of ■ cottage, ■ pretty buxom country maiden is artlessly exhibiting a pair of ■ shoes to ■ ■ young collegian, who ■ stooping, ■ in hand, ■ admire the effect. The father, looking in ■ the window, has taken in the situation ■ a glance, and his face does not express approval. A ■ ■ taking advantage of the general attention being fully engaged, ■ help herself liberally from ■ pan of milk.

1793. Major Topham (of the 'World,') endeavouring with his squirt ■ ■ tinguish the Rising Genius of Holman. Republished (see 1785, &c.).

1793. Illustrations ■ Smollett's Novels. Published by J. Siebbald, Edinburgh. Republished 1805, Longman and Co. (See 1791.)

May 25, 1793. A Tit Bit for the Bugs. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.—A ■ victim disturbed in the night, by the plague of insects, ■ sleepily trying to free himself from his tormentors.

Alas! what avails all thy scrubblings and shrugs :
Thou hadst better return to thy sheets ;
Heap mountains of clothes over thee and thy bugs,
And smother the hive in the streets.

September 25, 1794. An Old Maid in Search of ■ Flea. Published by S. W. Fores. G. M. Woodward invt., Rowlandson sculp. Companion to the above.

1792-93. Two illustrations, published by J. Siebbald, 1792. One illustration, Soldiers on March, making a feast with Filles de Foie, 1793, vol. ii. p. 44.

1793. Narrative of the War.

October 17, 1793. Amputation. Published by S. W. Fores. (See 1783.)

Illustrations ■ Fielding, Tom Jones, &c. (see 1791); T. Smollett. Expedition of Humphrey Clinker, ten plates by T. Rowlandson, republished 1805, Longman ■ Co.

1794

January 1, 1794. The Grandpapa. Published by S. W. Fores, ■ Piccadilly. This print appeared originally in 1792.—The conception of the plate

■ GRANDPAPA.

■ due ■ Henry Wigstead, the Bow Street magistrate, ■ whom ■ a friend and travelling companion of Rowlandson, a merry wit, and one of the congenial spirits of ■ day, several references have been made in the course of this work. The grandpapa ■ evidently enraptured with his infantine descendant, for whose diversion he is going through certain ludicrous antics; the venerable gentleman's tongue ■ not, as at first glance ■ would appear, lolling ■ in ■ contortions: ■ is a lump of ■ which he ■ holding between his teeth ■ divert ■ infant ■ and ■ performances are so far crowned with success, that ■ little favourite seems delighted with his exertions.

ENGLISH CURIOSITY, OR THE FOREIGNER STARED OUT

1794. Grog on Board. (See 1785.)

1794. Tea ■ Shore. (See 1784.)

January 1, 1794. English Curiosity, ■ the Foreigner stared ■ of Countenance. (See 1784.)—This print, republished by S. W. Fores, and bearing the date of 1794, seems ■ have made its appearance ■ appropriate ■ the time, the caricatures of this year making capital out of the arrival of ■ distinguished stranger in this country, the great Plenipo, whose title appears in ■ satires and ballads:—

TRAFFIC.

When he came to the Court, oh, what giggle and sport,
Such squinting and squeezing to view him !
■ envy ■ spleen in the women ■ seen,
All happy and pleased to get to him.
They vow'd in their hearts if men of such parts
■ found ■ the coast of Barbary,
'Twas ■ shame not to bring a whole guard for the king,
Like ■ great plenipotentiary.

January 1, 1794. Arrival of ■ Balloon. Aquatinted.

January 1, 1794. A Series of small Landscapes. Aquatinted.

January 17, 1794. St. James's and St. Giles's. (See 1792.)

September 25, 1794. An  Maid in Search of a Flea. S. M. U. invt., Rowlandson fecit.

New Shoes. Published by S. W. Fores. (See 1793.)

November 16, 1794. Traffic. Republished by S. W. Fores. (See 1791).—Two Jew clothesmen  securing  parcel of cast-off garments  the door of  highly respectable mansion, whereat  buxom housemaid is disposing of her master's old apparel.  the  beyond is shown the milkman adding up his  mode of calculation prevalent in the artist's day, although it has become obsolete long enough  in the metropolis.

December 16, 1794. The Comforts of High Living. Published by S. W. Fores.

December 18, 1794. Village Cavalry practising in a Farm Yard. G. M. Woodward invt. Rowlandson sculp. Published by S. W. Fores,  Piccadilly.—The volunteer and militia movements  pushed forward with enthusiasm in 1794, it being generally believed that the French might attempt  descent  our shores at any moment, and the loyally disposed  determined that they would  be taken either unawares or unprepared. Abundant materials were  for the sallies of the satirists: the training and equipment of  army of defence presented  sufficiency of comic incidents;  find Bunbury, Gillray, Woodward, and Rowlandson, burlesquing the rustic cavalry; in the present plate  number of farmers and helpers, mounted on  horses and armed with blunderbusses, flails, pitchforks, &c., are horrifying their officer by executing an impromptu charge upon a peaceful farmyard, knocking down old ladies, scattering the poultry, shooting the pigeons, capsizing labourers into wells, and producing  effect of universal confusion and dismay.

December 20, 1794. A Visit to  Uncle. Published by S. W. Fores.—The Uncle, who  a sufferer from gout,  evidently a well-to-do personage, and the attentions of his relatives, who are favouring the sufferer with a visit of condolence,  it appears, suggested by self-interest. One of the highly considerate relations seems good-naturedly assisting the invalid by making his will, while a pretty young damsel is embarrassing their interesting connection with a tender embrace, and altogether the members of the party  evidently  upon promoting their own prospects with a view to a division of the .

This print, which  aquatinted by F. Jukes,  been described as Hogarthian in type; it  issued with a companion plate executed under similar auspices, and  A Visit to  Aunt.

1794(?). Jews  a Luncheon,   peep into Duke's Place.—Three long-bearded Jews seated  table,  the eve of a feast. The joint  a sucking pig, into which the ■■■■ has put knife and fork; the faces of ■■■■ epicures express the ■■■■ greedy avidity. The appearance of white wigs above their black locks and goat-like beards gives ■■■■ unusually grotesque effect ■■■■ Rowlandson's delineation of the Hebrew ■■■■, always marked by the exaggerations of his fantastic humour.

1794. Luxury and Misery. Published by S. W. Fores. (See 1786.)

December 25, 1794. An Early Lesson of Marching. Woodward del. Etched by T. Rowlandson. Published by S. W. Fores, 3 Piccadilly.

December 28, 1794. Bad News upon the Stock Exchange. Published by S. W. Fores, ■■■■ Piccadilly. Woodward del, Rowlandson sculp.—A meeting of the various merchants and brokers upon the old Exchange. Sinister information ■■■■ supposed ■■■■ have upset the market; the countenances and actions of the various representative pillars of commerce present ■■■■ expressive of profound depression and distress. The individual oddities of such ■■■■ assemblage are characteristically dealt with; the grouping is good, and ■■■■ faces, costumes, and ■■■■ of the figures ■■■■ ■■■■ with ■■■■ felicity which ■■■■ particularly belonged ■■■■ Rowlandson's graver.

A MEETING TO THE STOCK EXCHANGE

1795.

1795. Harmony—Love. Republished. (See 1785.)1795. Effects of Harmony—Discord. (See 1785.)

A MASTER OF CEREMONIES INTRODUCING A PARTNER.

November 24, 1795. A Master of Ceremonies introducing a Partner.—Bath, 1785. 'Mr. Tynson unanimously elected for the New Rooms, and Mr. King for the Lower Rooms; they reigned till 1805, when Tynson resigned. Gainsborough painted King; the portrait is in the Assembly Rooms at Bath.'

1796.

1796. Sir Alan Gardiner, Covent Garden.—'Weeds carefully Eradicated and Venomous Reptiles destroyed—By Royal patent. God ■■■ the King!'—This print bears the name of Kingsbury, and it may be considered out of place in a work treating of Rowlandson's productions; as, however, the ■■■■ of the latter artist's handiwork ■■■ easily distinguishable, while the resemblance the plate offers ■ the known etchings after Kingsbury ■■ less distinctive, ■ is probable that the execution, ■■ least, is due to the skill of our caricaturist.

Sir Alan Gardiner ■■ elected Member of Parliament for Westminster, June 1796. The naval hero, as represented in the engraving, is dressed in his uniform, supplemented with a gardener's apron; he is reaping the Republican crop with his 'Sickle of Loyalty,' while protesting his patriotism: 'My life and services are ■■■ devoted to my King and country.' Britannia with her buckler is encouraging the admiral, and crowning her gallant son with ■ laurel wreath—'Go on, Britannia approves, and will protect you!' In the distance is shown Gardiner's ship The Queen with the words, First of June, inscribed ■ her flag. The admiral is slicing off the head of the Whigs; Fox is declaring: 'I ■■ always ■■ staunch friend ■ the crops and sansculottes, but this damned crop is quite unexpected.'

John Horne Tooke, represented as ■ reptile, is being swept up by the rake of the Fiend in person; he is crying, 'Now will no prospering virtue gall my jaundiced eye, nor people fostered by ■ beloved sovereign and defended by the wisdom of his counsellors. To anarchy and confusion I will blow my Horne, and wallow in everything that's damnable!'

The Evil One has already secured the head of Thelwall in his clutches—'This will not Tell well.' Hardy is groaning, 'I ■■ always Fool-Hardy.' The Devil ■■ congratulating the captured Horne Tooke—'Long looked for ■■■ ■ last, and welcome, thou staunch friend and faithful servant, ■■ thou into the hot bed prepared for thee!'

We find ■ drawing by Rowlandson dated November, 1796, caricaturing the figures of three very eminent personages ■ conference, the Lord Chamberlain (Lord Salisbury), ■■ King of Würtemberg—who had come ■■■ this country

■ high matrimonial mission, ■ marry the Princess Royal—and the Duke of Gloucester, playfully described by the satirists, ■ ■ of his slimness, as ■ 'slice of single Gloucester.' These portraits, which ■ very spirited, and full of character, ■ drawn on the back of another sketch, the first suggestions, in Rowlandson's clear and effective outline, for the cartoons of 'John Bull going ■ the wars' and 'John Bull's victorious return,' the best known version of which ■ issued by Gillray. (John Bull's Progress. Published June 3, 1793.)

May 5, 1796. General Complaint. Published by S. W. Fores.—The credit of this invention is due ■ Isaac Cruikshank, the father of the great caricaturist, but Rowlandson certainly had ■ hand in the execution of one version. The print represents ■ dissatisfied hero, whose dolorous portrait is described by the title; his head occupies the major part of his trunk, and he is ■ in that respect unlike the figurative impersonations of the potent and universally familiar Nobody. In one hand he is holding out his empty purse; in the other is the London Gazette; one sheet is filled with Bankruptcies, and the ■ is devoted ■ fresh unpopular exactions ■ meet the requirements of the Budget. The people were generally weary of the ■ and dissatisfied with the high prices and the decline of commerce brought in its wake. The ministers in power were ■ liked, and the generals, officers, and those who had the conduct of military affairs, were regarded with undisguised distrust; suspicions and grumblings against the administration ■ rife ■ outspoken, and in short the conduct of affairs was pretty unanimously voted disastrous for England, and discouraging as ■ her future. There was, according ■ the critics and satirists, but one popular headpiece, and he ■ easily ■ be recognised ■ General Complaint.

Don't tell ■ of Generals rais'd from mere boys,
Though, believe me, ■ ■ not their laurels ■ taint;
But ■ General ■ that ■ make the ■ noise—
■ the ■ ■ on—will be GENERAL COMPLAINT!

1796. Love.

June 15, 1796. A Brace of Public Guardians—A Court of Justice—A Watchman.

June 15, 1796. The Detection. Designed by H. Wigstead. Executed by T. Rowlandson. Published by S. W. Fores.

The credit of having executed the following engravings from the designs of an ■ has been assigned ■ Rowlandson; we are ■ satisfied that the plates are entirely due ■ ■ hand, but ■ likely that he ■ had some share in ■ work, ■ least ■ far ■ the frontispieces are concerned.

An accurate and impartial Narrative of the War.—By an officer in the Guards. In ■ volumes, containing ■ Poetical Sketch of the Campaign of 1793. Also a similar sketch of the Campaign of 1794. To which ■ added

■ Narrative of the Retreat of 1795, memorable for its miseries, with copious ■■ throughout. Embellished with engravings taken from drawings made on the spot, descriptive of the different ■■■ introduced in the poem.

' Per varias casûs, per tot discrimina rerum.'—VIRG.

London : Published by Cadell and Davies, Strand.

Illustrations.

VOLUME I.

An Austrian Foot Soldier. (Hungarian battalion.)
Favourite Amusement at Head-quarters.
Council of ■■■ interrupted.

VOLUME II.

An Austrian Foot Soldier. (Back figure.)
How ■■ throw an army into confusion.
Perils by Sea.

1797.

January 1, 1797. Spiritual Lovers. Published by Hooper and Wigstead, 12 High Holborn.

1797. A Theatrical Candidate. (Vide Kelley's Memoirs.)—Sheridan, in his managerial chair, is seated before his business table, on which is spread a long and discouraging statement, setting forth those bugbears of 'Sherry's' tranquillity—a list of 'unpaid salaries,' 'proprietor's demands,' 'Chancery proceedings,' and other applications for money. Letters from authors: Sir, do you ever mean to pay me for my Tragedy? &c. Beneath the sly manager's seat is perceived, 'pit money,' 'renter's shares,' and his own particular Art of Humbug. A unrepresentable candidate for dramatic honours is standing confronting the great man; according to a placard on the wall, this quotation from Hamlet is applied to the ungainly applicant, 'Oh, there be players that I have seen play, and heard others praise—and that highly (not to speak it profanely)—that neither having the accent of Christian, the gait of Christian, Pagan, nor man, have strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and made them well: they imitated humanity so abominably.'

"A candidate for the stage lately applied to the manager of Drury Lane Theatre for an engagement. After he had exhibited specimens of his various talents, the following dialogue took place:—'Sir, you stutter;' 'So Mrs. Inchbald.' 'You are lame of a leg;' 'So Toote.' 'You knock-kneed;' 'So is Wroughton.' 'You have a d—d ugly face;' 'So had Weston.' 'You are very short;' 'So was Garrick.' 'You squint abominably;' 'So does Lewis.' 'You are a mere monotonous mannerist;' 'So is Kemble.' 'You are but a miserable copy of Kemble;' 'So is Barrymore.' 'You have a perpetual whine;' 'So has Pope.' 'In comedy you are quite a buffoon;' 'So is Bannister.' 'You sing as ill as you act;' 'So does Kelly.' 'But you have all those defects combined;' 'So much the more singular.'"

August 1, 1797. Feyge Dam, with part of the Fish Market at Amsterdam. Rowlandson del., Wright and Schultz sculp. Published by R. Ackermann, Strand.—A large and important plate presenting boats, canals, and the quaint buildings; the appearance of these edifices, a hundred years ago, differed but slightly from their present aspects; the view is enlivened with crowds of Dutchmen, Jews, vrows, &c., variously occupied; all the humours and activities of the scene have been seized and improved by the artist with his characteristic vigour and animation. The architectural portions of Rowlandson's Dutch and Flemish views are worked out with and attention, and with an easy skill, strongly suggesting Prout's studies from similar picturesque materials.

Stadthouse, Amsterdam. Rowlandson del., Wright and Schultz sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

Place de Mer. Antwerp. Rowlandson del., Wright and Schultz sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

'From the Lion d'Or ■ Antwerp,' writes Angelo in his Reminiscences, 'I rambled about the town; the next day I saw the grand church, where the curious representation of Purgatory is exhibited, and the Place de Mer, which, as well as the view of the Stadthouse at Amsterdam, has been ■ accurately designed by Rowlandson (published by Ackermann) when ■ a tour in Holland with Mr. Mitchell, late partner in Hodsoll's (the banker's) house.'

1797. Dutch Merchants, sketched at Amsterdam.

August 1797. Tiens bien ton Bonnet, et toi, defends ta Queue. Rollandson inv. P. W. Tomkins sculp.—The plate which bears this title is somewhat of ■ enigma, especially as regards the orthography of the artist's name, which must have been generally familiar in 1797. The style of engraving, more pretty than powerful, a combination of delicate line and stipple, removes it still further from the recognised characteristics of Rowlandson's works; and the extreme finish and smallness of the method employed have produced a somewhat hard and laboured result, such ■ one does not expect to find in engravings by ■ after this artist.

The subject is revolutionary; an aristocrat, one of the jeunesse dorée order, and one of the mob, a bonnet rouge, ■ in active conflict. The ■ ■ have come into collision; the representative of social refinement is tall, elegant, well-favoured, and scrupulously attired, in the advanced fashion of the hour; his opponent ■ shambling, misshapen, uncombed, wretchedly clad, and with his ragged shirt open at the front and exposing his chest. The hero of the curled and scented locks has had the temerity to seize the red bonnet of Liberty, which ■ the only pretension ■ finery indulged in by the ruffian; in return, the strong hand of the latter is entwined in the clubbed tail of the dandy, and a significant warning ■ given him ■ take off that cherished appendage—shaving ■ queue and cutting ■ ■ by Mère Guillotine, the barber of the aristocrats, being sometimes synonymous ■ during the reign of the Jacobins.

It ■ in the spring of this year (1797) that ■ duty ■ proposed ■ England on hats, ■ impost the people avoided by wearing caps: the satirists intimated

■ danger that similar ■ would end in driving John Bull to adopt the republican ■ of our neighbours, and, among other allusions, Gillray published ■ plate (April 5th, 1797) under the title of Le Bonnet Rouge, or John Bull evading the Hat Tax, in which the national prototype is shown trying on the famous red bonnet of the Jacobin section.

1797. Cupid's Magic Lanthorn.—Rowlandson, engraved after Woodward.

Waggon and Horses outside 'The Feathers,' published by Laurie and Whittle (see 1787), republished 1803.

1798.

January 12, 1798. The Dinner. Published by J. Harris, Sweeting's Alley, Cornhill, and ■ Broad Street.—This plate forms ■ of ■ series of important size (21 × 17) executed by Rowlandson in a bold and spirited manner; the plate is dated 1787, and ■ issued in 1798.

The set, it is certain, ■ deservedly popular in those famous fox-hunting days, and doubtless the five best known subjects have graced the walls of many fine mansions, the owners of which inclined to the sports of the chase; indeed, this hunting series may be found in grand old country houses, much prized, and preserved ■ the present day, although too frequently the prints are found discoloured by time from the effects of having been varnished.

The Hunt Dinner pictures the wind-up of ■ successful day's sport. The table has been cleared, punch bowls are introduced, the run has been recorded and canvassed, and the venerable ancestral hall, hung with the ■ of an earlier generation of the occupant's progenitors, is ringing with the sounds of hilarity. The young squire, ■ of mettle, has mounted a chair in front of the portrait of his sire, who it ■ was ■ Nimrod in his day: field sports ■ obviously the family ■; the ■ of the estate, standing ■ the head of the table to pledge ■ toast, and holding ■ huge prize cup, in which Keynard's brush is dipped, is waving his cap, and giving a 'View Halloo!' which is inspiring his guests, the bold hunters gathered round his mahogany, who are acknowledging ■ lead with an enthusiasm and entrainement which correspond to the ardour of their host; the bumpers are lifted on high with reckless hands, and numerous pairs of stentorian lungs are echoing the challenge with boundless goodwill; in some instances the good cheer is a trifle overwhelming, and ■ hero, though capsized in his chair, is still doing honour, with undiminished rapture, to the ■ of the evening: ■ the privileged hounds are adding their voices to the general hilarity.

January 6, 1798. Comforts of Bath. Published by S. W. Fores, Piccadilly.

THE NEW SATI GUIDE;

MEMOIRS OF THE BLUNDERHEAD FAMILY.

IN A SERIES OF POETICAL

BY CHRISTOPHER ANSTEY, ESQ.

I'll hasten, O Bath, to thy springs,
Thy ■■■■ of the wealthy and gay,

Where the hungry are fed with good things,
And the rich are sent empty away.

I'm ■■■■ none of Hogarth's sketches
E'er formed a set of stranger wretches.

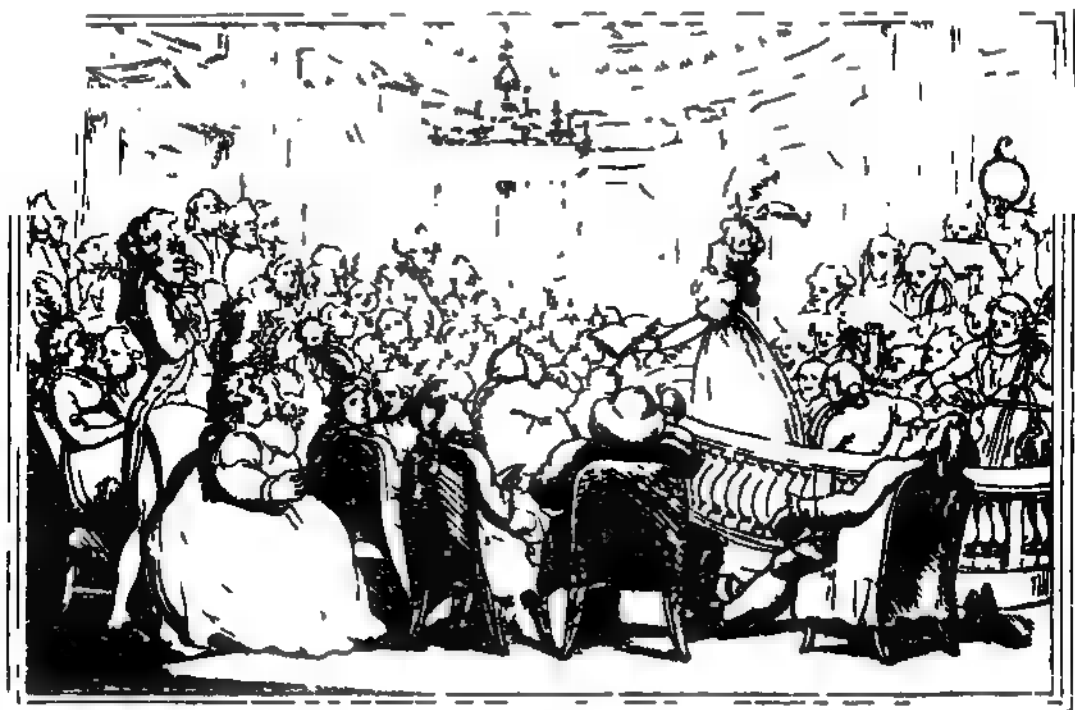

COMFORTS ■■■■ I.

Plate I.

We all are a wonderful distance from home !
Two hundred and sixty long miles ■■■■ come !
'Tis ■■ plaguy long way ! but I ne'er ■■■■ repine,
As my stomach ■■ weak and my spirits decline !
For the people cry here, be whatever your case,
You are ■■■■ well ■■ you come to ■■■■ place.
As ■■ all ■■■■ for health (as a body may say),
I ■■■■ for ■■■■ doctor ■■■■ very next day !
And ■■■■ doctor ■■■■ pleased, though ■■ short ■■■■ the warning,
To come ■■ ■■■■ lodging ■■■■ the morning :

■ looked very thoughtful and grave, to be sure,
 And I ■ myself, There's no hopes of ■ cure !
 ■ I thought I should faint when I ■ him, ■ Mother,
 Feel my pulse with ■ hand, and ■ watch in the other .
 ■ token of death that is heard in the night
 Could ■ have put me so much in ■ fright
 Thinks I, 'tis all over, my sentence is past,
 And ■ he is counting how long I may last

And so, as I grew every day worse and worse,
 The doctor advised me to send for ■ nurse

CONVOITS ■ BATH II

And the nurse was ■ willing my health to restore,
 She begged me ■ send for a few doctors ■ ,
 For when any difficult work's to be done,
 Many heads can despatch it much ■ than one,
 And I find there are doctors enough ■ this place,
 If you want ■ consult in ■ dangerous case !

Plate II.

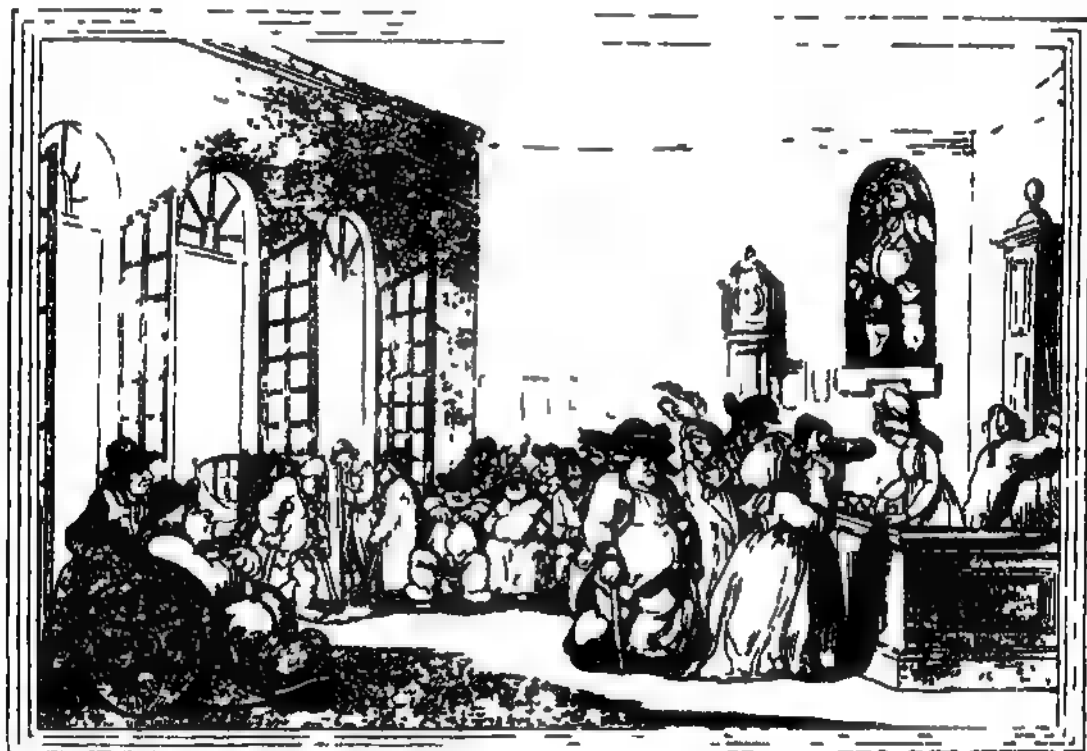

Why, Peter's a critic—with true Attic salt
 Can damn the performers, can hiss, and find fault,

And tell when ■ ought ■ express approbation,
 By thumping, and clapping, and vociferation ;
 But Jack Dilettante despises ■ play'rs—
 To concerts and musical parties repairs,
 With benefit-tickets his pockets he fills,
 Like ■ mountbank doctor distributes his bills ;
 And thus his importance and interest shows,
 By conferring his favours wherever he goes ;
 He's extremely polite both to me and my cousin,
 For he often desires ■ to take off ■ dozen ;
 He has taste, without doubt, and a delicate ear,
 No vile oratorius ever could bear ;
 But talks of the op'ras and his signora,
 Cries Bravo, benissimo, bravo, ancora !
 And oft is ■ kind ■ to thrust in ■ note
 While old Lady Cuckow is straining her throat,
 Or little Miss Wren, who's an excellent singer ;
 Then he points to the notes with ■ ring ■ his finger,
 And shows her the crotchet, the quaver, and bar,
 All the time that she warbles and plays the guitar ;
 Yet I think, though she's ■ it from morning till noon,
 The queer little thingumbob's ■ in tune.

Plate III.

One thing, though I wonder at much, I confess, is
 The appearance they make in their different dresses ;
 For, indeed, they look very much like apparitions
 When they ■ in the morning to hear the musicians ;
 And ■ I ■ apt to mistake, at first sight,
 For the mothers of those ■ have ■ over night.
 It shocks ■ to see them look paler than ashes,
 And ■ dead in the eye as the busto of Nash is,
 Who the evening before ■ so blooming and plump.
 I'm grieved to the heart when ■ go to the pump ;
 For I take every morning a sup of the water,
 Just ■ hear what is passing and see what they're a'ter ;
 For I'm told the discov'ries of persons refined
 Are better than books for improving the mind.
 But ■ great deal of judgment's required in the skimming
 The polite conversation of sensible women,
 For they ■ the pump, as before ■ saying,
 And talk all ■ while the music is playing !
 ' Your servant, ■ Fitchet.' ' Good morning, ■ Stote.'
 ' My dear Lady Riggledum, how ■ your throat ?
 Your ladyship knows that ■ you ■ scrawl
 ■ I hear that your ladyship ■ to the ball'

'Oh, Fitchet, don't ask me—good heavens, preserve—
 I wish there were ■ such ■ thing as ■ nerve ;
 ■■■ dead all the night, I protest and declare—
 My dear little Fitchet, who dresses your hair ?
 You'll come to the rooms—all the world will be there.
 Sir Toby Mac Negus is going to settle
 His tea-drinking night with Sir Philip O'Kettle .
 I hear that they both have appointed the same ;
 The majority think that Sir Philip's ■ blame ;
 I hope they won't quarrel, they're both in ■ flame :

COMFORTS OF BATH. III.

Sir Toby Mac Negus much spirit has got,
 And Sir Philip O'Kettle is apt to be hot.
 'Have you read the "Bath Guide," that ridiculous poem ?
 What a scurrilous author ! Does nobody know him ?'
 'You know I'm engaged, my dear creature, with you
 And Mrs. Pantickle this morning ■ loo ,
 Poor thing ! tho' she ■■■ last night to the ball,
 To-day she's so lame that she hardly ■ crawl—
 Major Lignum has trod on the first joint of her toe,—
 That thing they played last was ■ charming concerto,
 I don't recollect ■ have heard ■ before ,

The minnet's good, but the jig I adore ;
Pray speak ■ Sir Toby ■ cry ■ encore.'

Plate IV.

Jen declar'd she ■ shocked that so many should ■
To ■ doctored ■ death such ■ distance from home,
At ■ place where they tell you that water alone
Can cure all distempers ■ ever ■ known.
But, what ■ the pleasantest part of the story,
Jen has ordered for dinner ■ piper and dory ,

OF BATH. IV.

For to-day Captain Cormorant's coming to dine,
That worthy acquaintance of Jenny's and mine.
'Tis ■ shame ■ the army that men of such spirit
Should ■ obtain the reward of their merit ;
And after ■ many hardships and dangers incurred,
He himself thinks he ought ■ be better preferred.
And Roger, or, what is ■ name ? Nicodemus,
Appears ■ as kind, and as much ■ esteem us ;
Our Prudence declares he's an excellent preacher,
■ by night ■ by day he is so good to teach her ;
I ■ you before that he's ■ so kind
To go out ■ riding with Prudence behind,

He frequently dines here without any pressing—
 And now to the fish he is giving his blessing ;
 And ■ that ■ the case, though I've taken ■ griper,
 ■ venture ■ peck ■ the dory and piper.

Plate V.

But my cousin Jenny's ■ fresh ■ ■ rose,
 And the Captain attends her wherever she goes.
 The Captain's a worthy good ■■ of a man,
 For he calls in upon us whenever he can,

COMFORTS ■ BATH. V.

And often ■ dinner or supper he takes here,
 And Jenny and he talk of Milton and Shakspeare;
 For the life of ■■ ■■ I can't think of his name,
 But ■■ all got acquainted as ■■ as ■■ ■■

Plate VI.

■ come, Calliope, and say
 How pleasure wastes the various day :
 Wheresoever ■ thy path,
 Tell, O tell, the joys of Bath.

Every morning, every night,
 Gayest ■■■■ of fresh delight.
 O ye guardian spirits fair,
 All who make true love your care,
 May I oft my Romeo meet,
 Oft enjoy his converse sweet ;
 Lo ! where all the jocund throng
 From the pump-room hastes along,
 See with joy my Romeo comes !
 He conducts me to the Rooms ;

■■■■ OF BATH. VI.

There he whispers, not unseen,
 Tender tales ■■■■ the ■■■■ ;
 While his eyes ■■■■ fixed ■■■■ mine,
 See each nymph with envy pine.
 O the charming parties made !
 ■■■■ ■■■■ walk the South Parade,
 Some ■■■■ Lincomb's shady groves,
 Or to Simpson's proud alcoves ;
 Some to chapel trip away,
 Then take places for ■■■■ play ;
 Or ■■■■ the painter's ■■■■ repair,
 ■■■■ Sir Peregrine ■■■■ there,

Pleased the artist's ■■■ to trace
 In his dear Miss Gorgon's face.
 Happy pair! who fixed as fate
 For the sweet connubial state,
 Smile in canvas tit-tit-tit!

Plate VII.

'And if you've ■ mind for a frolic, i' faith,
 I'll just step and ■ you jump into the bath'
 Thinks I ■ myself, they are after ■ fun,
 And I'll ■ what they're doing, as ■ ■ ■ gun:

COMFORTS OF BATH. VII

Oh! 'twas pretty to ■ them ■ put ■ their flannels,
 And then take the water ■ so many spaniels;
 And though all the while it grew hotter and hotter,
 They ■ just ■ if they were hunting an otter.
 'Twas ■ glorious sight to behold the fair ■
 All wading with gentlemen ■ ■ their necks,
 And view them so prettily tumble and sprawl
 In a great smoking kettle as big as ■ hall;
 And to-day many persons of rank and condition
 Were boil'd by command of an able physician

You ■■■■ conceive what ■ number of ladies
 Were stewed in the water the same as our maid is :
 So Tabby, you see, had the honour of washing ■■■■ folks of distinction and very high fashion ;
 ■■■■ spite of good company, poor little soul,
 She shook both her ears like a mouse in a bowl.
 ■■■■ what ■ surprising, no mortal e'er view'd
 Any one of the physical gentlemen stew'd ;
 Since the day that King Bladud first found out these bogs,
 And thought them so good for himself and his hogs,
 Not ■■■■ of the faculty ever has try'd
 These excellent waters to cure his ■■■■ hide ;
 Tho' many a skilful and learned physician,
 With candour, good sense, and profound crudition,
 Obliges the world with the fruits of his brain,
 Their nature and hidden effects to explain.

Plate VIII.

Our trade ■ encouraged as much, ■ not ■■■■
 By the tender soft sex ■ ■■■■ ever adore ;
 But their husbands, those brutes, have been known to complain,
 And swear they will never set foot here again.
 Ye wretches ingrate ! To ■■■■ ■■■■ with your wives,
 The comfort, the solace, ■■■■ joy of your lives ;
 Oh ! that women, whose price ■ ■■ far above rubies,
 Should fall ■ the lot of such ignorant boobies !
 Doesn't Solomon speak of such women with rapture,
 In ■■■■ the eleventh and thirty-first chapter ?
 And surely that wise King of Israel knew
 What belonged ■ a woman much better than you !
 He says, ' If you find out ■ virtuous wife,
 ■■■■ will do a ■■■■ good ■ the days of her life ;
 She deals like ■ merchant, she sitteth up late.'
 And you'll find it is written in verse twenty-eight,
 Her husband is ■■■■ to be known at the gate :
 ■■■■ ■■■■ hath need or occasion for spoil,
 When his wife ■ much better employ'd ■ the while ;
 She seeketh fine wool, and ■■■■ ■■■■ she buys,
 And ■ clothed in purple and scarlet likewise.
 Now, pray, don't your wives do the very ■■■■ thing,
 And follow th' advice of ■■■■ worthy old king ?
 Do they spare for expenses themselves in adorning ?
 Don't they ■ about buying fine things all the morning !
 And ■ cards all the night take ■■■■ trouble ■ play,
 To get back the money they spent in the day ?
 ■■■■ ■■■■ ■■■■ their ■■■■ more profit ■■■■ yield,
 ■■■■ ■■■■ much ■■■■ a lily ■■■■ ■■■■ in the field ;

They toil not, indeed, nor, indeed, do they spire,
 Yet they ■■■■ when once they begin,
 But are very intent on increasing their store,
 And always keep shuffling and cutting for more
 Industrious creatures' that make it ■ rule
 To ■■■■ the fish, while they manag ■ pool,
 ■■■■ I should like to excel in a trade
 By which such ■ number their fortunes have made.
 I've heard of ■ wise, philosophical Jew,
 That ■■■■ the cards in ■ manner that's ■■ ,

■■■■ OF ■■■■ VIII.

One Jonas, I think, and could wish for the future
 To have that illustrious ■■■■ for my tutor,
 And the Captain, whose kindness I ne'er can forget,
 Will teach ■■ a ■■■■ that ■■ calls lansquenet.

Plate IX.

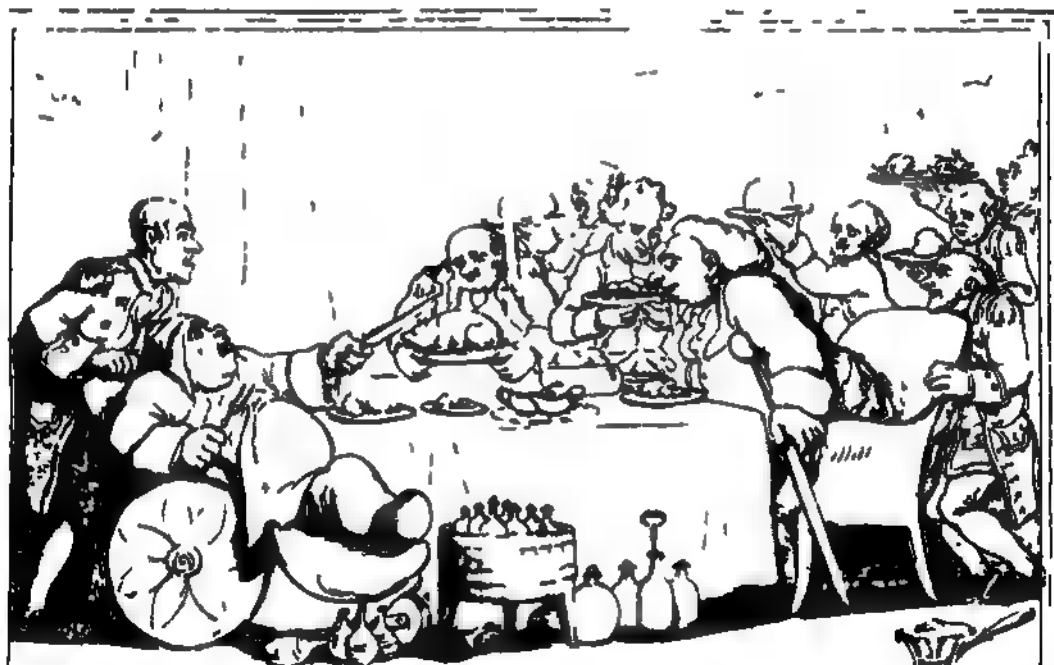

SONG, WRITTEN AT ■■■■ GILL'S, ■■■■ IMINENT COOK AT BATH

Of all the cooks the world ■■■■ boast,
 However great their skill,
 To bake or fry, to boil or roast,
 There's ■■■■ ■■■■ Gill

Sweet rhyming troop, no longer stoop
To drink Castalia's rill ;
Whene'er ye droop O ■■■ the soup
That's made by Master Gill.

'Tis this that makes my Chloë's lips
Ambrosial sweets distil ,
For leeks and cabbage oft she sips
In soup that's made by Gill.

Immortal bards, view here your wit,
The labours of your quill,

COMFORTS OF BATH. IV.

To sing the fowl upon the spit
Condemned by Master Gill
My humble ■■■ that fate shall meet,
Nor shall I take it ill ;
But grant, ye gods ! that I may eat
That fowl, when drest by Gill.

These are your ■■■ poetic fires
That drest this savoury grill ,
Even while I ■■■ the Muse inspires,
And tunes my voice ■■ Gill.

When Chloe strikes the vocal lyre,
 Sweet Lydian measures thrill ;
 But I the gridiron more admire,
 When tuned by Master Gill.

' Come, take my sage of ancient use,'
 Cries learned Doctor Hill ;
 ' But what's the sage without the goose ?'
 Replies my Master Gill.

He who would fortify his mind,
 His belly first should fill ;
 Roast beef 'gainst terrors best you'll find ;
 ' The Greeks knew this,' says Gill.

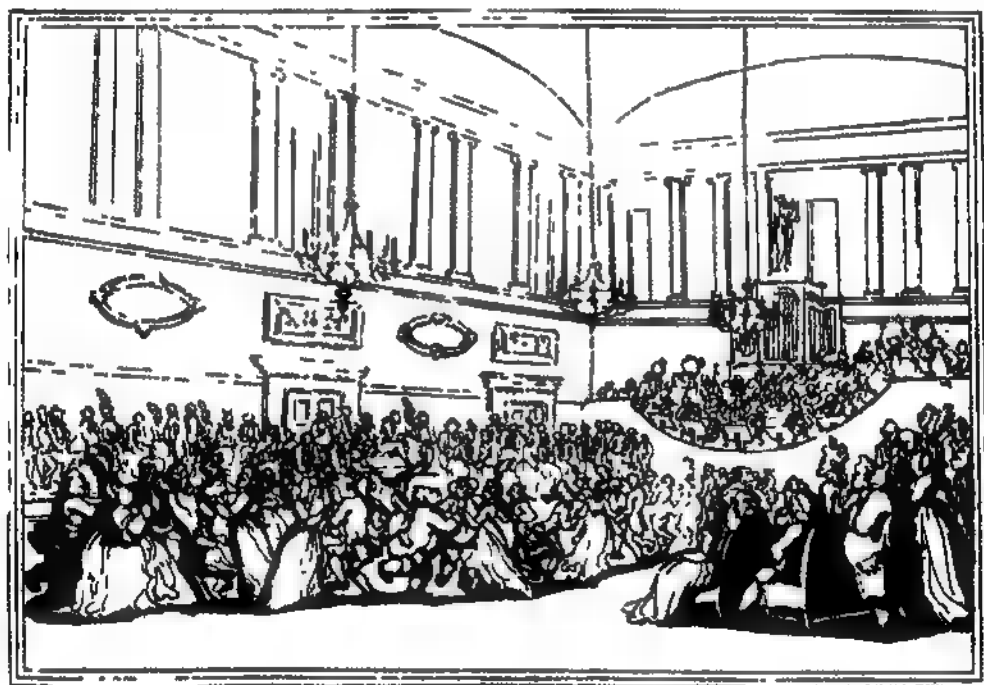

Your spirits and your blood to stir,
 Old Galen gives a pill ;
 But I the forced-meat ball prefer,
 Prepared by Master Gill.

Plate X.

What joy ■ the ball, what delight have I found,
 By all the bright circle encompassed around !
 Each moment with transport my bosom felt warm,
 For what, my dear mother, like beauty can charm !
 E'en the Goddess of Love, and the Graces, and all Must yield to the beauties I've ■ at the ball ;
 For Jove never felt such a joy at ■ heart,
 Such a heat ■ these charming sweet creatures impart.
 In short, there is something in very fine women,
 When they meet all together, that's quite overcoming.

But hark ! now they strike the melodious string,
 The vaulted roof echoes, the mansions all ring ;
 At the sound of the hautboy, the bass, and the fiddle,
 Sir Borcas Blubber steps forth in the middle.
 Now why should I mention a hundred or more,
 Who went the ■ circle as others before,
 To ■ tune that they play'd us a hundred times o'er ?
 And who at the ball on that night did appear,
 Who danc'd in the van and who limp'd in the rear,
 What dukes and what drapers, what barbers and peers,
 What marquises, earls, and what knights of the shears,
 What cook and what countess, what nymphs of the brooms,
 What mop-sceptred queens ■ that night to the Rooms.
 But ■ what time they heard the horn's echoing bellow,
 The hautboy's shrill twang, the brisk fiddle, the mellow
 Bassoon, and the sweet grumbling violoncello.

At what time they heard the men puff and belabour
 With mouth, stick, and fist the gay pipe and the tabour,
 At ■■■ they did scuttle, did flutter and run,
 And take wing like wild-geese alarm'd with ■ gun,
 In ■ moment ■■ bustling and rustling between ■■
 Some coupled like rabbits, ■ fat and ■ lean one,
 Some pranc'd up before, some did backward rebound,
 While some ■■ in earnest, with looks more profound,
 And sweat-bedew'd foretops, did lard the lean ground;
 But others more neat on the pastern arose,
 Like the figure of Pan, whom you've seen, I suppose,
 Just saluting the turf with the tips of his toes;

COMFORT OF LATE. A.

And ■ nothing, I think, can more please and ■■■
 Than a contrast of stature, complexion, and age,
 Miss C ■ with a partner as black ■ Omiah,
 KITTY TIT shook her heels with old Doctor GOLIAH,
 And little JOHN CROP, like a pony just nick't,
 With long DOLLY LONDERHEAD scamper'd and kick't.
 As for MARGE, tho' young SQUIRT had been promised the honour,
 BILLY DANIEL stept ■■ and ■ once seized upon her;
 While with flames that keen jealousy's rage did improve,
 Poor SQUIRT felt the heart rending passion of love.

Plate XI

For persons of taste and true spirit, I find,
 Are fond of attracting the eyes of mankind :
 What numbers ■■ see, who, for that very reason,
 Come to make such a figure at Bath ev'ry season !
 'Tis this that provokes Mrs Shenkin Ap-Leck
 To dine at the ord'nary twice in ■ week,
 Though ■ home she might eat a good dinner in comfort,
 Nor pay such ■ cursed extravagant sum for t ,
 But then her acquaintance would never have known
 Mrs. Shenkin Ap-Leck had acquired the bon ton ,

COMFORTS OF BATH XI

N^er show how in taste the Ap-Locks can excel
 The Duchess of Truffles and Lady Morcell ,
 Had n^er been ador'd by Sir Pyc Macaroni,
 And Count Vermicelli, his intimate crony ,
 Both ■■ of such taste, their opinions are taken
 From ■ ortolan down to a rasher of bacon

The company made a most brilliant appearance,
 And ate bread and butter with great perseverance
 All the chocolate, too, that my lord set before 'em,
 The ladies despatched with the utmost decorum

The peer ■■■ quite ravished, while close ■ his ■■■ Sat Lady Bunbutter; ■ ■■■ pride !
 Oft turning his eyes, he with rapture surveyed
 All the powerful charms ■■ so nobly displayed.
 Oh ■■ I ■ voice that was stronger ■■ steel,
 With twice fifty tongues ■ express ■■ I feel,
 And ■ many good mouths, yet I ■■ could ■■
 All the speeches my Lord made to Lady Bun'butter !
 So polite ■ the time that he ne'er touched a bit,
 While she ate up his rolls and applauded his wit :

COMFORTS OF BATH. XII.

For they ■■■ ■■ men of true taste, when they treat, ■■■ talk a great deal, but they ■■ should eat ;
 I freely will own, I the ■■■ preferred
 To all ■■ genteel conversation ■ heard.

■ ■■ XII.

I never as yet could the reason explain,
 Why we all sallied forth in the wind and the rain ;
 ■■ ■■ such confusion was never yet known ;
 Here a cap and a hat, there a cardinal blown !

How ■■■ did huddle, ■■ scuddle, ■■ run!
 One would think to be wet must be very good fun;
 For by wagging their tails, they ■■ seemed to take pains
 To moisten their pinions, ■■ ducks when ■ rains.
 I saw, all ■ once, ■ prodigious great throng
 Come bustling, and rustling, and jostling along;
 As home we came—'tis ■■■ ■■■ you'll hear
 What ■ dreadful disaster attended the peer.

April 1, 1798. Views of London. No. 3.—Entrance of Tottenham Court Road Turnpike, with ■ view of St. James's Chapel. Rowlandson delin., Schultz sculp. Published April 1, 1798, Ackermann's Gallery, Strand.

April 1, 1798. Views of London. No. 4.—Entrance of Oxford Street ■ Tyburn Turnpike, with ■ view of Park Lane. Rowlandson delin., Schultz sculp. Published April 1, 1798, Ackermann's Gallery, Strand.

June 1, 1798. Views of London. No. 5.—Entrance from Mile End or Whitechapel Turnpike. Rowlandson delin., Schultz sculp. Published June 1, 1798. Ackermann's Gallery, Strand.

June 1, 1798. Views of London. No. 6.—Entrance from Hackney ■ Cambridge Heath Turnpike, with ■ distant view of St. Paul's. Rowlandson delin., Schultz sculp. Published June 1, 1798. Ackermann's Gallery, Strand.

May 1, 1798. He won't be ■ Soldier. Schultz sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

May 1, 1798. She will be a Soldier. Schultz sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

1798. An extraordinary ■■ the road from London ■ Portsmouth, or ■ instance of unexampled speed used by ■ body of Guards, consisting of 1,920 ■■ and file, besides officers; who ■ June 10, 1798, left London ■ the morning, and actually began ■ embark for Ireland at Portsmouth at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, having travelled seventy-four miles in ten hours. Rowlandson del., Schultz sculp.

July 18, 1798. Light Horse Volunteers of London and Westminster, Reviewed by His Majesty ■ Wimbledon Common. July 5, 1798.

August 1, 1798. Soldiers Recruiting, 1. Rowlandson del., Schultz sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

August 1, 1798. The Cottage Door. Rowlandson del., Schultz sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

August 1, 1798. Private Drilling, 5. Rowlandson del., Schultz sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

September 1, 1798. The Consequence of not Shifting the Leg. Published by H. Angelo, Curzon Street, Mayfair.

September 1, 1798. The Advantage of Shifting the Leg. Published by H. Angelo, Curzon Street, Mayfair.

October 15, 1798. The glorious victory obtained — the French fleet off Nile on August 1, 1798, by the gallant Admiral Lord Nelson of the Nile.— Showing the distressed situation of the French frigate La Serieuse, of 36 guns and 250 men, which, after having been dismasted, sank. L'Orient of 120 guns, and 1,010 men, commanded by the French Admiral Brueys, is seen in the background blowing up, by which she considerably damaged The Majestic, of 74 guns, 590 men, commanded by Captain Westcott, who fell early in the action. The Majestic was, after his death, fought with the bravest bravery by her first lieutenant, Mr. Cuthbert, during the remainder of the action. London : published October 15, 1798, Ackermann's Gallery, 101 Strand. Rowlandson del.

THE FRENCH FLEET OFF NILE

October 20, 1798. Admiral Nelson recruiting with his brave tars after the glorious Battle of the Nile. Rowlandson del. and sculp. Published Ackermann's Gallery, Strand.—The gallant admiral and his chosen captains are raised above the crowd on deck; they are, true British of the old school, encouraging the esprit de corps which is hero perfectly understood, since was able, so far the sea-lions who served under him concerned, cultivate it such unmeasurable advantage for honour of his country.

The brave tars, of all denominations, are thoroughly enjoying themselves after their own hearts, while commemorating the immortal victory of Aboukir Bay, and with each successive bumper are toasting their idol, who is ■ in their midst, and drinking success and glory ■ the navy of Old England, and confusion ■ her enemies—patriotic sentiments to which ■ and all ■ prepared ■ give practical effect in the hour of action.

Dammy Jack, what a gig, what a true British whim,
Let the fiddles strike up on the main !

■ ADVANTAGE OF SHIFTING THE TIG.

What ■ would care for ■ eye or ■ limb
To fight o'er the battle again ?
Put the bumpers about and be gay,
To hear how our doxies will smile.
Here's ■ Nelson for ever, huzza,
And King George on ■ banks of the Nile.
See their tricolor'd rags how they're duft,
To show that we're lords of the sea,
While the standard of England is flying aloft,
Come, my lads, ■ cheer it with three !

1798. A Mahomedan Paradise.—A Turk embracing an elegantly dressed and highly presentable female.

November 12, 1798. High Fun for John Bull, — Republicans put their last shift. Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand. —The victory gained by Nelson at Aboukir Bay, the combined fleets, disconcerted the French enthusiasts and restored confidence at home; it recognised that while English admirals could sweep their enemies from the seas, neither the dangers of invasion, nor the difficulties of contending with France, need be ranked of much consequence. In the print, John Bull is enjoying the High Fun of setting his opponents to equip fresh fleets, in order that his sailors may carry them off captive as trophies. A Dutch Oven is serving as the bakery, Mynheer is pushing in a fresh batch of war frigates; 'Donder and Blaxan dis fraternisation, instead of smoking mine pipes, and sacking de gold, dis French broders make build ships, dat Mynheer Jan may have the fun take dem.' The Spaniard, with a tray of big guns, is faring no better under fraternisation. 'How! that Nelson wit one gun and eye can take our ships by dozens, then vat do against the autres, wid two guns and eyes? day will have two dozen time.' The Frenchmen are excited their prospects; the head baker a fine batch ready for the oven: 'Sacredieu, Citoyens, make a haste wit one fleet, den we will show you how to make one grande Invasion;' the journeyman working his kneading tub, which contains such ingredients for fresh fleets as, Ruination, Botheration, Confiscation, Requisition, Plunderation, Limitation, Execution, Constitution, Fraternisation, Naturalisation, Expedition, Abolition, Cut-throatation, and Damnation. The assistant hopeful: 'By Gat, well you may talk, make haste, when that English Nelson take ships by the douzaine!' John Bull, whip in hand, is laughing with satisfaction: 'What! you could find that out before, you stupid dupes, but since you began the fun you keep on—so work away, dam ye, else Jack Tar will be idle.' Jack Tar is hopping off with a load of ships; his spirits excellent: 'Push on, keep moving, I'll for another cargo; Old England for ever, huzza!'

1798. The Discovery. Republished 1800, 1808-9, &c.—A bed-chamber is the scene of the discovery; a young couple have been surprised by a corpulent old gentleman, who is threatening a kneeling and simple-looking youth with a red-hot poker; the detected swain, who has been disclosed in a cupboard, is entreating forgiveness with clasped hands, and the lady is dissolved in

Published 1798. Lately published by William Wigstead, 40 Charing Cross. Printed September, 1799.

Published 1798. Annals of Horsemanship.—Containing accounts of accidental experiments, and experimental accidents, both successful and unsuccessful.

ful, communicated by various correspondents to Geoffrey Gambado, Esq. Illustrated with  copper plates. Printed on ■ super-royal paper. Price in boards, 15s. 3d.

Published 1798. The Academy of Grown Horsemen.—Containing complete instructions for walking, trotting, cantering, galloping, stumbling, and tumbling. Printed on ■ super-royal paper, and illustrated with twelve copper plates. Price in boards, 15s. 3d.

Published 1798. Love in Caricature. On eleven plates, etched by Rowlandson; with a humorous frontispiece. The plates consist of—Spiritual Lovers, Aged Lovers, Sympathetic Lovers, Quarrelsome Lovers, Duke's Place Lovers, Avaricious Lovers, Country Lovers, Forgiving Lovers, Bashful Lovers, Platonic Lovers, and Drunken Lovers. Published in two numbers, 5s. each.

1799.

January 1, 1799. Cries of London. No. 1. Buy a Trap, a Rat-Trap, buy my Trap. Published by R. Ackermann, 111 Strand.—The vendor of rat-traps is pausing before a shop decorated with such live stock as a rabbit in a hutch, and a jackdaw in a cage; he is offering his traps to a spectacled old gentleman, who is considering his wares with curiosity. The man in a trap, carried on the trap-seller's arm, is exciting the interest of a dog.

January 1, 1799. Cries of London. No. 2. Buy my Goose, my Fat Goose. Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.—A fat countrified-looking dealer is offering some fine geese for sale at the door of an apothecary, who, with his wife, is examining the birds with unnecessary closeness.

February 20, 1799. Cries of London. No. 3. Last Dying Speech and Confession. Published by R. Ackermann, 111 Strand.—A ballad singer, of the St. Giles' order, is crying the last speech of 'the unfortunate malefactors who were executed this morning:' a scene enough when the punishment of hanging visited small offences, and executions were of more frequent occurrence. That the fear of capital punishment does not act as a corrective to theft is illustrated in the background of the print, where a mere infant is drawn in the act of picking the pocket of a passing pedestrian.

February 20, 1799. Cries of London. No. 4. Do you want any brick-dust? Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.—From this plate it seems that brick-dust, in the artist's days, was sold in sand. A patient donkey is saddled with an enormous pannier of brick-dust, and the vendor is pouring the contents of a bag into a bowl, held at the door of a highly respectable residence, by a pretty maid, whose personal captivations the attentions of the brick-dust dealer are particularly addressed.

March 1, 1799. Cries of London. No. 5. Water-cresses, buy my Water-cresses.—An old shylock-like person is knocking at a door in Portland Street (Mrs. Burke's), and is solicited to buy water-cresses by a maiden with a pretty face and a shapely form; the old reprobate is leering at the girl, and is disregarding a further offer of cresses from a more ragged and juvenile seller. A pair of highly-coloured damsels, redundant in charms and florid finery, ■■ peering out of ■■ upper window ■■ the aged visitor.

NAWAB ■■■■■ BAHADUR

■■■ ■■ ■■■■■ ■■■ I, 'BUY A TRAP, A ■■■ TRAP, BUY MY TRAP.'

1799. Cries of London. No. 6. All a-growing, a-growing; here's flowers for your gardens.—A ■■■■ young gardener, with ■■ substantial cart, drawn by ■■ donkey, has a handsome selection of various evergreens and flowers for sale; he is standing at the door of ■■ mansion, where ■■ lady and little girl ■■ choosing from his stock of geraniums in pots.

NO. 5, 'WATFR CRESSER, MY CRESSER.'

May 4, 1799. Cries of London. No. 8. Hot ■■■■ buns, ■■■■ penny buns.—A decent woman, wearing a white apron, and with a cloth over her basket, ■■ supplying a patroness with ■■ plateful of hot ■■■■ buns. A pretty ■■■■ in a ■■■■ morning dress, ■■ buying buns, and her children by her side are tasting the same without any loss of time. Outside a church, in the background, ■■ ■■■■ dignitary, with flowing gown, sleeves, and wig, who is sweeping away from an appeal for charity addressed to him by a beggar and her offspring.

February 1, 1799. A Charm for a Democracy, Reviewed, Analysed, Destroyed, January 1, 1799, the confusion of its Affiliated Friends. Published for the Anti-Jacobin Review, by T. Whittle, Peterborough Court, Fleet Street. —The Tory party at the beginning of 1799 (the parliamentary session opened at the end of November 1788) endeavoured to stifle the Opposition by raising outcries against sedition, and by denouncing publications of revolutionary tendency, with which they pretended to implicate the Whigs. On the strength of certain alarmist tracts, extraordinary measures were taken to restrain the liberty of the press, and a few months later, in July, the Ministry went so far as to put into effect the extreme measure of subjecting printing presses to a licence. The organs of the Tories, exulting in the discomfiture of their opponents, continually urging increased and more political persecutions, while they pretended that the members of the Opposition were, in despair of succeeding in preserving their party by fair means, identifying themselves with the more treasonable writers, and were laying secret trains for the destruction of the Constitution. The King's Bench, Newgate, and Coldbath Fields began to be crowded with political prisoners, the last-mentioned receiving the popular nickname of the Bastille. The Anti-Jacobin Review was, as usual, peculiarly at the expense of the malcontents, and Rowlandson's assistance was enlisted to prepare a cartoon which, it was supposed, would expose the Whigs in their true colours, and hold up the abettors of sedition to the execration of all loyal subjects.

There are four elements displayed in this general view of the fancied agency : the supernatural department, headed by the arch-fiend in person ; the Radical pamphleteers and so-called workers of treason ; the prominent members of the disconcerted Opposition and their followers ; and the King and his ministers displayed, as Olympians, in the clouds. The Infernal Influence superintending the preparation of the charm, which Horne Tooke and his friends, as the witches in Macbeth, are working at a boiling cauldron ; the nature of the component parts of the conjuration are thus set forth :—

Eye of STRAW and toe of CADE,
TYLER'S bow, KOSCIUSKO'S blade,
RUSSELL'S liver, tongue of cur,
NORFOLK'S boldness, FOX'S fur ;
Add thereto a tiger's chauldron,
For the ingredients of the cauldron !

One of Horne Tooke's colleagues is working the incantation from a breviary of his own, ' Lying, False Swearing, &c.,' and is flourishing a witch's besom, ' Thrice the Gallic wolves have bayed!' Another of the weird sisterhood is stirring the unholy mixture, crying: 'Thrice! and twice King's Heads have fallen!' Horne Tooke is attending the fuel department; he is muttering: 'Tis time, 'tis time, 'tis time!' The witches' familiars whirling above their heads, and in the midst of the flames from the cauldron, in the shape of wild cats, with wings; a flying monkey, with 'Voltaire' his collar; a tiger with vulture wings, marked Robespierre; and Dr. Price's little dog, which is remarkable animal associated with the early magicians, the ministering imps. The fiend, with his pitch-fork, and attended by dragons, serpents, Cerberus, other terrific of imaginative construction, suggestive of Callot's grotesques, is directing head cook the Democratic philter-workers

Pour in streams of Regal Blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

The inflammable materials, which piled up make the pot boil, and fanned into flames by a diabolical news-boy, from the Courier, consist of such combustibles O'Connor's Manifesto; Oakley's Pyrology; Belsham's History; Rights of Nature; Quigley's Dying Speech; Friend's Atheism; Whig Club; Universal Equality; Darwin's topsy-turvey Plants and Animals; Destruction; Sedition; French Freedom; Political Liberty; Duty of Insurrection; Equality; Fraud; Sophisms; Blasphemy; Heresy; Deism, together with such fiery sentiments Kings do good; Joel Barlow; Resistance is Prudence; The Vipers of Monarchy and Aristocracy will be strangled by the infant Democracy; Kings Servants, &c.; with the Analytical Review, a rival publication, thrown in Fallen to rise again.

The Duke of Bedford is at the head of the Opposition; the members seem fare badly between the two extremes of Pittites and Radicals, the leader is demanding: 'Where are they! Gone. Pocketed the Church and Poorlands! The Tythes next!' The Duke of Norfolk is deploring the 'Fallen Sovereignty (of the People). Degraded Counsellor!' having been deprived of his offices as a punishment for the famous toast. Lord Derby is equally hopeless: 'Poor Joe is done. No Test, Corporation Acts.' Fox, who had kept word and absented himself from the debates, is reduced a tattered state, and enquires: 'Where I hide my secluded head?' Erskine, in legal trim, 'Counsellor Ego,' deploring: 'Ah, me—poor I!' Tierney regretting past activity: 'Would I had spoke of the licentiousness of the press!' Francis Burdett, who brought an investigation into abuses practised on the unfortunates in the New State prison, before House, a motion founded on observations, is enquiring: 'What I report my the Bastille?' Thelwall, with lectures under his 'Off to Monmouthshire'; and the followers of the dispirited 'party' are wandering, blindly, in the 'Cave of Despair.'

Above the clouds is the King as Jupiter, with supporters; light is being poured down in streams, upon the machinations of the disaffected patriots, from a symbolical Afflavit Deus Dissipantur. 'Your Destruction cometh in a whirlwind!' 'Vengeance is ripe!' The monarch is strangling a brace of serpents, and asserting, 'Our enemies confounded!' One minister offering congratulations on a 'Great Victory!' while Pitt, the Crown, is insinuating an expeditious method of disposing of his adversaries: 'Suspend their bodies.' The Lord Chancellor, careful of the forms of law, suggesting a more formal mode of procedure: 'Take them to the King's Bench and Coldbath Fields!'

February 10, 1799. An Artist Traveling in Wales. Rowlandson delin., Mercke sculp. Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.—The caricaturist—in company with his friend, Henry Wigstead, himself a bit of an artist, further given sportive flirtation with the Muses—visited North and South Wales in August 1797, for the purpose of carrying out a picturesque tour, to which the travellers furnished the accompaniments of descriptive sketches and sketchy descriptions. The journey undertaken solely as a pleasure trip, and not carried out with the intention of 'making a book.' It seems, however, that the interest which partial friends took in the notes of scenery, found in Rowlandson's sketch-books, and in the minutes of travel, jotted down in Wigstead's journal, finally prevailed over the travellers' reluctance to make much of a little; and accordingly, two years later, the Remarks on a Tour in North and South Wales were submitted to the public, in the form of an octavo book, with some additional views by the hands of Pugh, Howitt, &c. (See 1800.)

Rowlandson appears both to have enjoyed this excursion, and to have been able to turn his opportunities to good account. He made several characteristic landscape sketches, and the present writer possesses a few drawings, in various stages of progress, which evidently commenced at the spot.

A more Rowlandsonian relic of the tour is preserved in the plate, An Artist Travelling in Wales, first published after the traveller's return to town. Who the artist represented may be the writer is prepared to assert; but, as caricaturists have a well-recognised habit of turning only the figures of their friends, but their own persons, to satiric usages on occasions, it is suggested that the large and gaunt limner, with strongly-outlined features, and with his long legs slung over a Welch pony, may offer points of resemblance to the designer; it is evident that more than once (See The Chamber of Genius, April 2, 1812) Rowlandson has burlesqued his own figure, made himself the hero of equivocal situations, much as artists who have lived in our times have, now and again, delighted to introduce their features amidst the fictitious personages they have thought proper or have been called upon to introduce. Notably in the cases of Thackeray and Cruickshank, this whimsical poussant is of such frequent occurrence, that the student, curious in tracing such eccentricities of genius, will be able to discover at least a dozen characteristic and intentional resemblances of those admirable masters scattered through their illustrations, and relating to various periods of their careers.

It may be that remembrances of his old master at the Academy, Richard Wilson, who held the office of Librarian when the waggish youth, Rowlandson, a student at the Academy, floated through the artist's mind in the course of his Welsh peregrinations, and tempted him to combine points of personality peculiar to both. It was not the first time Rowley's pencil had taken liberties with the marked traits of 'Red-nosed Dick,' who died, it may be conceded, some fifteen years before the tour in question. At all events, Peter Pindar, the witty and vituperative, was one of Rowlandson's intimates, and his advice to landscape-painters in general and to his friend and chum, Richard Wilson, in particular, whose talents he had the daring to lavishly acknowledge in the face of a generation which treated the artist with cold neglect because, forsooth, his works were 'not fashionable,' should appropriately be engraved below Rowlandson's unflattering presentation :—

Claude painted in the open air.
Therefore to Wales you once repair,
Where you'll find of true magnificence;
This great advantage—if in debt,
You'll have with creditors no tit-tat-tit;
So leave the bull-dog bailiffs all behind,
Who hunt you with what noise they may,
You'll hunt for needles in a stack of hay.

A view in Wales is faithfully pictured; the unsophisticated natives are struck with astonishment at the figure of the travelling artist, whose profession they are far from comprehending, and whose paraphernalia excite their wonder. Rain, which is unknown in the Principality, is wrapping landscape and figures in a moist embrace. The artist's very remarkable umbrella is a poor protection; his hat is limp; his safety is a long clay pipe, a luxury difficult to replace, is thrust through a hole in the flap; his lank locks are dripping; the moisture is concentrating, and dropping down in well-defined proboscis. Of course it is necessary, in such an expedition, to bear the baggage and incidental impedimenta. A box contains the artist's larder and wardrobe; his saddle-bags hold the provisions of the hour; beside him swing his tea-kettle and coffee-pot; his goodly sketch-book is slung across his back, much as the observant traveller may have seen canvasses strapped across the shoulders of pedestrian artists during the [redacted] and in the vicinity of Bettews, Conway and the Lluwy in [redacted] day. The easel [redacted] folded [redacted]—and [redacted] vastly unwieldy affair [redacted] is—on the back of the stumpy pony; brushes, [redacted] palette, knife, [redacted] of oil of goodly proportions, and [redacted] palette of extensive dimensions, are attached [redacted] the animal's neck; and thus equipped, the man of paint and his rough steed [redacted] picking a devious way through the saturating moisture, up and down the steep mountains of the country: [redacted] pleasant souvenir of past hardships and discomforts by the way.

February 18, 1799. Nautical Characters.

- | | |
|----------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Cabin boy. | 6. Purser. |
| 2. Sailor. | 7. Lieutenant. |
| 3. Marine. | 8. Captain. |
| 4. Cook. | 9. Admiral. |
| 5. Midshipman. | 10. Captain of Marines. |

March 1, 1799. An Irish Howl. Published for the Anti-Jacobin Review by T. Whittle, Peterborough Court, Fleet Street.—The month following, the Irish patriots, and rebels alike, [redacted] favoured with [redacted] view of their position, which [redacted] hardly more encouraging than the pictorial prospect held out for the enlightenment of the Democrats [redacted] home. A National Convention is supposed [redacted] have been assembled; the members [redacted] thrown into consternation; and the table, round which they have been deliberating [redacted] the concoction of their organ the United Irishmen, is upset. A diabolical visitation is sufficient [redacted] for this confusion. A [redacted] representative of the Fiend of Evil, with formidable horns and claws, bearing [redacted] pitchfork [redacted] his shoulder, and with the French cap of Liberty, labelled Anarchy, [redacted] his brow, is intruding [redacted] the scene, with [redacted] masterpiece of [redacted] own preparation, setting forth the tender fate which the Irish patriots [redacted] likely [redacted] [redacted] the hands of their allies the Jacobins. Le Tableau Parlant [redacted] [redacted] portray an 'Irish Stew, [redacted] favourite [redacted] for French Palates.' The [redacted] of Erin are, according [redacted] the canvas, thrust into [redacted] 'Revolutionary Pot,' which is boiling [redacted] [redacted] fierce fire; certain Jacobin French cooks, wearing the [redacted] of Liberty, are thrusting their betrayed disciples into the seething cauldron, 'Equality, all to be stewed en masse,' while another apostle of Freedom [redacted] clapping [redacted] the lid: 'Liberty of being stewed!' The Arch-Deceiver, thrusting [redacted] [redacted] tongue, [redacted] imparting his instructions: 'Stew [redacted] well; [redacted] be [redacted] [redacted] for you and me!'

The United Irishmen are variously affected [redacted] despair [redacted] the probable end [redacted] their plottings. One patriot, intended for Grattan, [redacted] O'Connor, [redacted] exclaiming, 'My merits with the Republic should have saved me; but I find we must all stew together!' A ragged Reformer [redacted] thrown on his back; a bundle of pikes

■ at his feet ; ■ case of Radical Reform. A papist friar is crying : ' By St. Patrick, a complete Catholic emancipation.' Others of the party are crushed. A legal gentleman ■ moaning ■ despair : ' So much for Republicanism and glorious independence! No money! No lawyer!' His neighbour cries : ' I ■ howl in vain ; ■ all gone ■ pot!' Another patriot is thinking regretfully of Ireland's proper and natural ally : ' Brother John would ■ have treated us so! What your own O'Connor, too!' The Map of Ireland ■ dragged to pieces, and dismantled by flying devils and imps of mischief christened ' Tallien, Barras, Lepaux,' &c. One of the united brethren is turning his eyes on the pitiful end of the Green Isle : ' Poor Erin, how thou'rt torn ■ pieces by these five harpies!'

1799. An Etching after Raphael Urbinas. An example of Rowlandson's powerful renderings of studies after the old masters, executed in a bold and flowing manner.—The nude figure of ■ man, who has probably been sleeping ■ the foot of a tree, has suddenly unfolded his cloak and found himself confronted by a hissing serpent, which has raised itself ■ its tail in readiness ■ attack the unprepared victim, whose face is made ■ wear an expression of statuesque horror. A club is on the ground at the feet of the man.

Apollo, Lyra and Daphne. Frontispiece probably to ■ book of music.—Apollo, with his crook and shepherd's dog by his side, and with sheep ■ his feet, is seated at the entrance to a wood. Several musical instruments, bound together with ribands, ■ hung on the branch of a tree over his head. On the other side of the picture is a nymph in classic guise, evidently captivated with his harmonies ; she is resting her hand on the shoulder of ■ second listening maiden, dressed as a shepherdess.

April 10, 1799. St. Giles's Courtship. Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.

Here vulgar Nature plays her ■ part,
And eyes speak out the language of the heart,
While health and vigour swell the youthful vein,
To die with rapture, but ■ live again.

April 10, 1799. St. James's Courtship. Published by R. Ackermann, ■ Strand.

1799. View of ■ Cathedral Town on Market Day (Great Yarmouth), Rowlandson del. ■■ sculp.

May 10, 1799. Borders for Rooms and Screens. Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand. Woodward delin. Etched by Rowlandson. In twenty-four sheets. Republished May ■ and August 1.

June 20, 1799. Connoisseurs. ■ by T. Rowlandson, ■ James Street, Adelphi.—The interior of ■ cabinet of choice works of art. On ■ ■

ST. GILES'S COURTSHIP.

■ displayed a florid and somewhat suggestive picture of Venus and Cupid richly framed. An old connoisseur, with ■ glass to his eye, and ■ three-cornered hat under his arm, is seated in ■ easy elbow chair, critically examining the work in question. Three other distinguished dilettanti ■ peering over ■ back, and stretching their noses ■ near ■ contrivable ■ the object of their gloating admiration. All these amateurs have evidently called in ■ view the collection, which includes ■ example after 'Susanna and the Elders,' and kindred subjects.

August 1, 1799. Horse Accomplishments. Sketch 1. A Paviour. Woodward del., Rowlandson sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

August 1, 1799. Horse Accomplishments. Sketch 2. An Astronomer. Woodward del., Rowlandson sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

August 1, 1799. Horse Accomplishments. Sketch 3. A Civilian. Woodward del., Rowlandson sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

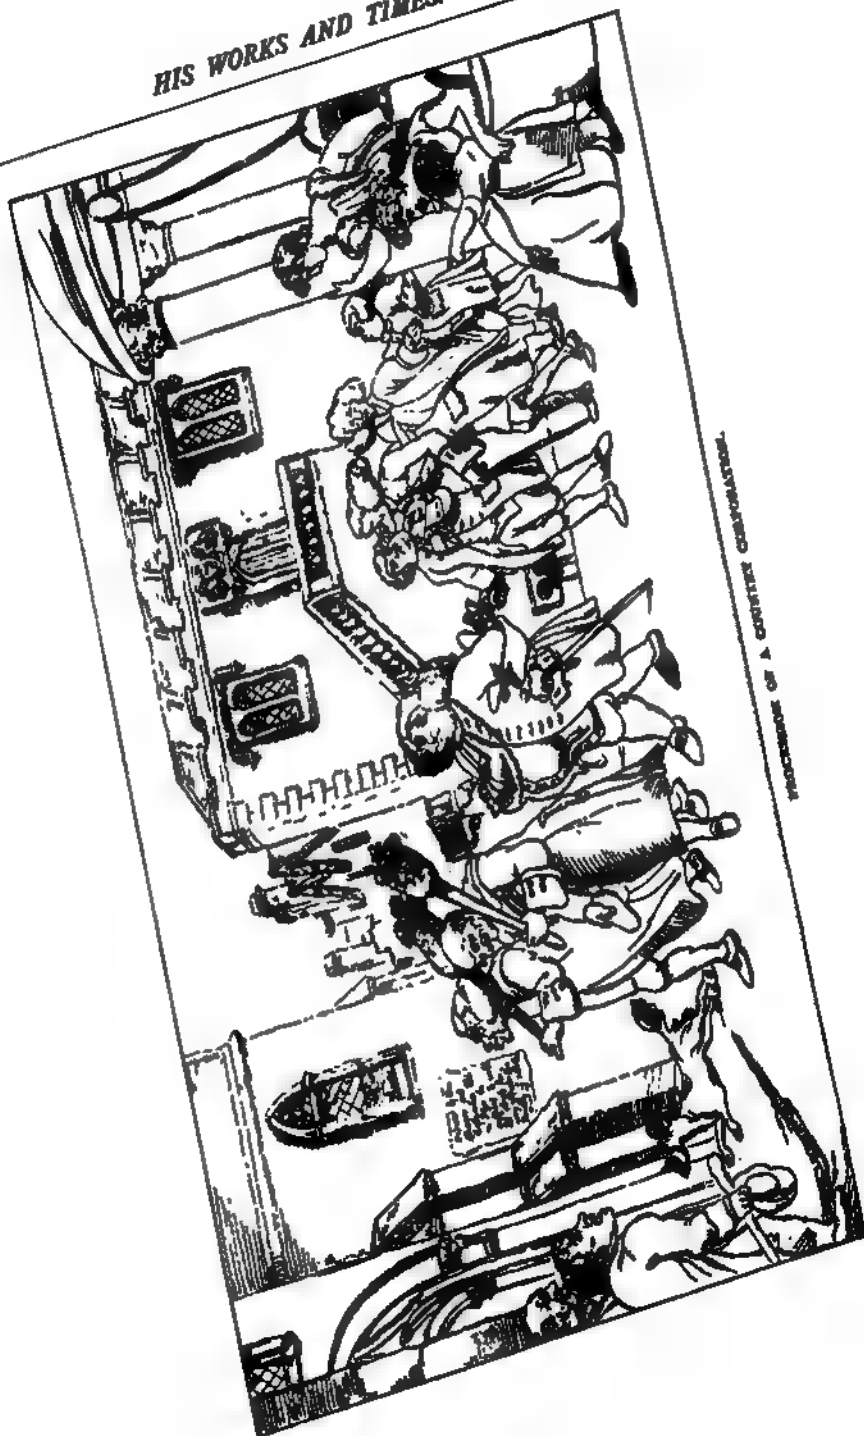

August 1, 1799. Horse Accomplishments. Sketch 4. A Devotee. Woodward del., Rowlandson sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.—The rider is ■ what inconvenienced by the eccentricities of his steed. The horse ■ travelling in a somnolent condition, of which the equestrian seems unconscious, as he ■ thus soliloquising ■ the unusual proclivities of his Rosinante :—'This is certainly ■ very devout animal; always on ■ knees; five times in a mile; constantly worshipping something ■ other. What is he ■ ?'

August 1, 1799. Waddling Out. Woodward del., Rowlandson sculp. Published by R. Ackermann.

August 10, 1799. Comforts of the City: A Good Speculation. No. 5. Woodward del., Rowlandson sculp. Published by R. Ackermann, August 10, 1799.—A ■ citizen ■ rejoicing ■ a fortunate investment.

August 10, 1799. Comforts of the City: A Bad Speculation. No. 6. Woodward del., Rowlandson sculp. Published by R. Ackermann, August 10, 1799.—In ■ ■ the dabbler in novel ventures is looking very blank and disconcerted, ■ the receipt of the information that his very latest and ■ ingenious 'spec' does ■ promise to turn out favourably, according ■ ■ communication he ■ in his hand :—'I am sorry ■ inform you that your scheme for manuring London with old wigs will not do.'

August 12, 1799. Procession of a Country Corporation. H. Bunbury del. Etched by Rowlandson. Published August 12, 1799, by T. Rowlandson, James's Street, Adelphi.—Bunbury's pencil ■ ■ more happily employed than when engaged in perpetrating the comicalities which he noticed in the country; rustic simplicity, the pretensions of ■ ■ noodles, bumptious nobodies, and kindred absurdities, such as ■ ■ displayed ■ 'The procession of a Country Corporation,' wherein the Aldermen and Mace-bearers, ■ worship ■ Mayor, with his chain, and his dignified deportment, and his following of puffed-up provincial big-wigs ■ shown filing in solemn state past the pump, the Town-hall, and the stocks, to the Church vestry; the country clodhoppers and honest children of the soil are gazing open-mouthed, over-awed by the impressive ■ of the ceremony, and the solemn airs of ■ performers. Bathos ■ arrived ■ in ■ notice on the wall, past which these 'hogs in harness' ■ strutting—'Ordered by the Mayor and Corporation that ■ pigs be suffered ■ walk the streets. For every offence the penalty of five shillings!'

FACEDOWN OF A CHURCH CHORISTERS.

August 1799. A ■ of Put in ■ Country Ale House. G. M. Woodward invt. Etched by T. Rowlandson. Published by R. Ackermann.

1799. Bay of Biscay. (See 1789.)

September 3, 1799. Forget and Forgive, or Honest Jack shaking hands with ■ old acquaintance. Published September 3, 1799, by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.—The troops forming the ■ Expedition which restored the Prince of Orange ■ his ■ represented landing in the Texel, and delivering the Dutch from the hands of their friends the Sansculottes. Mynheer has become wretched and ragged under the French régime; he is shaking a British tar by the hand, heartily delighted ■ see a chance of recovering his freedom:—'Ah, Mynheer Bull, these cursed French rats have gnawed ■ to the backbone; they have barely left ■ ■ pipe, ■ drop of Hollands, ■ ■ red herring; oh, what ■ pretty pickle have we brought ourselves into!' 'Well, Mynheer,' responds Jack Tar, 'you ■ heartily sick of fraternity: had you stuck ■ your old friends instead of embracing your ragged relations, you might have kept your gilders, saved your breeches, and preserved both ■ and stadtholder.' A Dutch vrow is trampling her foot upon ■ order of the French Convention:—'If any Dutch woman be detected in concealing any part of her husband's private property, she shall be guillotined.' She has secured a trifling comfort, a bottle of 'Hollands gin.' 'I have had great trouble, Mynheer, to smuggle ■ bottle for you, those French ragamuffins search ■ so close!' The troops forming the English contingent ■ landing from their ships, and driving the French legions before them ■ the point of the bayonet; the apostles of Liberty are losing their requisitions, 'Ducats and gilders for the ■ of the municipality;' they despair of converting their invaders: 'Here be dese English Bull dog, dey be such stupid brute ■ we ■ make them comprehend ■ joys of Fraternisation!'

September 20, 1799. The Irish ■ and his Nurse. ('Changed ■ Birth.') Woodward del. ■ by Rowlandson.

October 1, 1799. The Gull and the ■ Published by Hixon, 155 Strand.

October 1, 1799. The Crow and the Pigeon. Published by Hixon, ■ Strand.

October, 1799. Twopenny Whist. Designed by G. M. Woodward. Etched by T. Rowlandson. Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.

October 28, 1799. A Note of Hand. Designed by G. M. Woodward. Etched by Rowlandson. Published by R. Ackermann.—From Bunbury Woodward the change is easy. In these renderings of the designs of less skillful amateurs it must be remembered that Rowlandson's part was limited that of a mere copyist of their ideas; he had to put crude conceptions into presentable shape, and in most instances he has added points which originated in his own invention, and, as far as execution is concerned, he has made the works mainly his.

In the present caricature there is actually indication of Woodward's handiwork; a sailor of the period, returning to shore with prize money galore, and a watch, chain, and seals in either fob, silver shoe-buckles, and a spic-span rig-out, is calling cash a twenty-pound note on a banker, who is negligently looking at the ceiling. The honest tar, who probably thinks the amount of the draft he has drawn a veritable fortune, is evincing his consideration for the man of finance—'I say, my tight little fellow, I've brought you a Tickler! A draught for twenty pounds, that's all! But don't be downhearted, you shan't stop on my account! I'll give you two days to consider of it.'

1799 (?). Legerdemain.—The subject owes its invention to the observant humour of Henry Bunbury, the caricaturist of gentle birth, who ever a friendly ally of Rowlandson; while the latter has lent his trained skill to the conceptions of the flattered amateur, further regarded, according to the views of his contemporaries, his distinguished patron. We are introduced in 'Legerdemain,' to the consulting room and operating surgery of certain rustic practitioners, who combine the twin professions of dentists and pedicures; teeth and corns being extracted promiscuously, the requirements of their patients might necessitate. Strength, rather than skill, is the chief requisition, if we may judge from the whimsicalities of 'Legerdemain,' where main force directs the operations of the performers. One sturdy tooth-drawer is bringing his knee and all the brute power to his command to bear in the way of leverage on the refractory grinder of an unfortunate and distracted client; a hammer and a pair of pincers do not argue well for the painless dentistry of the establishment. A squire, judging from the liveried servant in attendance, is submitting his foot to another professor, for the removal of an obstinate corn; the victim is thrown into paroxysms of agony by the forcible mode of procedure adopted: the rude chiropedist has seized the sufferer's foot securely under the thumb, and is dragging away with such vigour that, the patient will be persuaded decently, will be dragged out by the roots—the latter an undeniable method of permanent cure so far as corns are concerned.

November 1, 1799. March ■■■ Camp. Published by T. Rowlandson, 1 James Street, Adelphi.

November 1, 1799. Good Night. Woodward del. Etched by Rowlandson. Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.—A gentleman in the ■■■ stage of sleepiness with his nightcap ■■■ his head, and his chamber-candlestick flaring away—he is yawning like ■ cavern, and stretching his arms ■ if heavy with slumber. The expression is realistically conveyed.

November 5, 1799. A Bankrupt Cart, ■ the Road ■ Ruin ■ ■ East. Woodward del. Etched by Rowlandson. Published by R. Ackermann, 101 Strand.—The fortunate possessor of that dubious vehicle, 'a Bankrupt cart,' ■ proceeding in ■■■ past his own premises with his chin in the air; the showy wife of his bosom in feathers and finery is riding by his side, and their children ■■ packed in sandwich fashion. A follower, who is probably a drayman, put into livery for the occasion, and mounted ■■■ of the horses used in the business, ■ grinning ■ the high and mighty dignity assumed by his employers. A news boy is blowing ■■ horn in the averted faces of the party, offering the London Gazette, which contains the objectionable black list of bankruptcies, wherein, it ■ hinted, the ■■■ of 'Mash, Brewer,' figures conspicuously. Puddle Dock is the scene of ■■■ exposure, ■■■ the brewery is posted with advertisements, which indicate the sudden ■■■ of fashionable ambition: 'A house ■ be let in Grosvenor Square, suitable for ■ genteel family,' ■■■ 'Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, The Comedy of the Bankrupt, with High Life Below Stairs.'

■ ■■■■ CART, ■ THE ROAD ■ ■■■ ■ ■■■ ■■■

November 5, 1799. A Dasher, on the Road to Ruin. G. M. Woodward del. Etched by T. Rowlandson. Published by R. Ackermann.

1799 (?). Loose Thoughts.—A reclining female figure, lightly attired, and gracefully posed, buried in romantic creations of the imagination.

The Bookbinder's Wife.—Somewhat similar to the [] of the preceding. The nude figure of a lady toying with her infant: these subjects, which are avowedly of a slightly suggestive character, [] handled with a grace and refinement which goes a long way [] redeem the free [] of the subjects.

1799 (?). The Nursery.—A domestic subject; a gracefully posed female figure and two infants.

1799 (?). A Freshwater Salute.—The occupants of [] waterside crafts [] exchanging courtesies on the river, a more frequent [] the beginning of the century, when figures of speech, especially among 'waterside loafers,' were more forcible than refined. The boatmen in the respective wherries [] bawling at [] another, and a stout damsel is extending, in expressive pantomime, [] invitation which has shocked the proprieties of the [] pants of the other craft, a lady of ton in a gay hat and feathers, and a very prim old gentleman, who is looking perfectly rigid with horror and indignation.

1799 (?). Ride to Rumford.—'Let the gall'd jade wince.' A stout equestrienne has put up her steed [] the shop of an apothecary, who combines the profession of veterinary surgeon: the venerable practitioner, with spectacles [] nose, is preparing a diaculum plaister for the scarified horsewoman.

1799 (?). City Fowlers—mark. H. Bunbury del., Rowlandson sculp.

Against the wind [] takes his prudent way,
Whilst the strong gale directs him to the prey;
Now the [] assures the covey near,
He treads with caution and he points with fear.—GAY.

1799 (?). The City Hunt. H. Bunbury del., Rowlandson sculp.—This [] of cockney horsemanship is suggestive of the learned lectures of Geoffrey Gambado, Esq., Riding Master to that authority on equestrianism, the Doge of Venice. It is a question which are the [] extraordinary animals, the mounted citizens [] their horses; all [] grotesque and burlesque. Of [] men are shown tumbling [] and [] their steeds; and with equal propriety, a brook is introduced, in which to deposit the unfortunate leapers. Various [] have come [] share the run, and among the most spirited riders may be distinguished a brace of black chimney-sweeps, fraternally perched astride the single donkey possessed by [] firm.

1799 (?). Une Bonne Bouche.—A stout gourmand impaling an entire sucking-pig on a fork.

1799 (?). Cits airing themselves ■ Sunday. H. Bunbury del., Rowland-■■ sculp.—A lady and gentleman ■■ enjoying ■■ equestrian promenade, ■■ busily engaged in flirting ■■ notice that their horses ■■ riding over some ■■ dering pigs. A Jew is in ■ chaise, taking his pleasure in the air; ■■ Jewess, his wife, is driving, the ■■ of their family ■■ by their side. A ■■ elderly volunteer in his uniform ■ out for exercise and relaxation, mounted on ■ heavy horse from the cart, ridden with blinkers.

1799 (?). A Militia Meeting.—The original suggestion for this subject, which bears Rowlandson's name, is, with several other small etchings, belonging
 ■ the same series, due to Henry Bunbury; it represents ■ 'justice's parlour,' filled with local magnates, who ■■ seated in council on the ■■ militia question. The characteristics of the various personages are individualised with the sense of humour and that power of hitting off quaint expressions with which both Bunbury and Rowlandson ■■ gifted in the highest degree.

1799 (?). A Grinning Match.—The companion print ■ A Militia Meeting, executed under the same auspices. A party of rustics, whose rude features ■■ more rudely burlesqued, ■■ grouped around a barrel ■ assist ■■ competitive exhibition of 'face-making.' The challenge ■■ thus: 'A gold ring ■ be grinned for; the frightfullest grinner ■ be the winner.' Mounted ■ a tub is ■■ of the champions, round his head ■ the traditional setting of ■ horse collar, and he is succeeding in making ■■ most fearful grimaces, to the consequent delight of the spectators.

1799 (?). Distress, (18 inches by 12½,) from an Original Drawing by Thomas Rowlandson.—Published by Thomas Palser, Surrey side, Westminster Bridge.
 —That Rowlandson possessed a remarkable power of grasping the humorous side of life was generally acknowledged in his ■■ day, and is ■■ well established, time having confirmed the justness of his title to ■ lasting reputation; indeed, his works in this order have long received ■ recognition which ■■ assured than has been accorded ■ those of his contemporaries. It may, however, ■ pointed out, with equal sincerity, that his conception of the terrible is ■■ more remarkable than his facility for expressing the whimsical frivolities of society.
 It would be difficult to find ■ more realistic representation of the horrors of shipwreck than the appalling ■■ pictured under the title of 'Distress.' The fearful sufferings of the survivors, exposed without sustenance to the dangers of the deep, and the hopelessness of any chance of ■■ all simply ■■ forth with intense feeling, and a faithful perception of the horrors of ■■ situation which is harrowing to examine, although it is evident that the ■■ of the subject ■■ have exercised ■ certain fascination ■■ the mind of the delineator.
 It seems clear that portions of a ■■ have escaped the loss of their vessel only
 ■ become the powerless victims of more insupportable sufferings. A solitary officer and several of the [] are crowded into a boat, which they have no means of properly navigating. Provisions and [] are evidently wanting; [] horizon [] blank, the sea [] still running high, and the sky threatens further tempests. Hunger, thirst, and exposure, [] reducing the [] waifs [] madmen; while some are in paroxysms, others [] stiffening corpses, and the body of [] sufferer is about [] be [] into the [] to lighten the freight; some [] sunk in blank indifference [] imbecile despair; others [] furious, [] or two [] looking for help from above, and [] few, among them the young officer and the boatswain, are doing their best to steer the open and over-laden boat towards [] likely []. The cabin boy's distress is rendered with peculiar pathos.

STUDIED

1799. Hungarian and Highland Broadsword Exercise. Twenty-four plates, designed and etched by Thomas Rowlandson, under the direction of Messrs. H. Angelo and Son, Fencing-masters [] the Light Horse Volunteers of London and Westminster. Dedicated [] Colonel Herries. Oblong folio. London. Published, as the Act directs, February 12, 1799, by H. Angelo, Curzon Street, Mayfair.—Engraved Title and Frontispiece. A tablet topped by the figure of Fame and supported by [] relievo representing Guards on the march; below it a trophy, and the escutcheon of the corps. On either side [] archway [] portico, with relievo tablets above, representing military scenes. On guard and saluting, [] the left, is a Light Horse Volunteer of London and Westminster; on the right is [] of the [] corps dismounted, presenting []. The etchings are dated September 1, 1798. The subjects [] executed with considerable dash and spirit. The major part of the plates represent [] of cavalry, depicted with knowledge and power; instead of being, [] the titles of the illustrations would indicate, mere definitions of the positions assumed in the exercises, the [] has, with superior ingenuity and ability, managed [] produce [] lively series of military tableaux filled with appropriate actions, in which bodies of troops, reviews, incidents of war, engagements of large parties, assaults, repulses, and other military demonstrations, make up the backgrounds, and [] [] of plates of [] broadsword exercises into [] animated and interesting collection of warlike pictures. Judging from the lengthy subscription list appended to the folio, these plates must have enjoyed [] wide popularity, secured under the auspices of the Angelos, whose acquaintances amongst the [] world enabled them [] obtain [] satisfactory array of patrons and subscribers.

The subjects [] follows :—

Prepare to guard.

Guard.

Horse's head, near side, protect.

Off side protect, new guard.

Left protect.
 Right protect.
 Bridle arm protect.
 Sword ■■■ protect.
 St. George's guard.
 Thigh protect, ■■■ guard.
 Give point, and left parry.
 Cut one, and bridle arm protect.
 Cut two, and right protect.
 Cut one, and horse's head, near side, protect.
 Cut six, and sword ■■■ protect.
 Cut two, and horse's off side protect, ■■■ guard.
 Cut one, and thigh protect, ■■■ guard.
 On the right ■ the front, parry against infantry.

Infantry.

Outside guard ; St. George's guard. Inside guard.
 Outside half hanger. Hanging guard. Inside half hanger.
 Half-circle guard. Medium guard.
 The consequence of not shifting the leg.
 The advantage of shifting the leg.

1799. Loyal Volunteers of London and Environs.—Infantry and cavalry in their respective uniforms. Representing the whole of the Manual, Platoon, and Funeral exercises in eighty seven plates. Designed and etched by Thomas Rowlandson. Dedicated by permission to His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester. Engraved title-page; inscription in ■ lozenge; head of Mars above; Mercury's caduceus and branches of laurel; Cupid-warrior, and Cupid-justice with scales and sword, supported by ■ trophy of arms, accoutrements, &c. Dedicatory title.—This illuminated School of Mars, or review of the Light Volunteer corps of London and its vicinity, is dedicated by permission ■ His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester by his most obliged and very humble servant, R. Ackermann, 101 Strand. August 12, 1799.

LIST ■ SUBJECTS.

PLATE.	Infantry.	POSITION.
1. St. James's Volunteers	■ ■ ■ ■ ■	■ ■ ■ ■ ■
■ The Royal Westminster Volunteers	■ ■ ■ ■ ■	Attention.
3. ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ Volunteers	■ ■ ■ ■ ■	Fix bayonets, ■ motion.
4. St. Mary, Islington, Volunteers	■ ■ ■ ■ ■	" 2nd "

- | | | | |
|--|--|--|--|
| 5. St. Mary-le-Strand and Somerset
Volunteers | Fix bayonets, 3rd motion. | | |
| 6. London and Westminster Light
Horse Volunteers (Dismounted) . | Shoulder arms, 1st motion. | | |
| 7. Clement Danes Volunteers . . | " 2nd " | | |
| 8. Bloomsbury and Inns of Court Volunteers | Recover | | |
| 9. St. George's, Hanover Square, Light
Infantry | Shoulder arms (from recover), 1st motion. | | |
| 10. St. George's, Hanover Square, Volunteers | Charge bayonet, 2nd motion. | | |
| 11. St. Martin's in the Fields Volunteers | " 1st " | | |
| 12. Temple Bar and St. Paul's Volunteers (Loyal London Volunteers) | Present arms, 1st motion. | | |
| 13. Cornhill Association Volunteers . | " 2nd " | | |
| 14. Temple Association Volunteers . | " 3rd " | | |
| 15. Green Volunteers, Light Infantry (Mile End Volunteers) . | Support arms, 1st motion. | | |
| 16. Bethnal Green Battalion Volunteers | " 2nd " | | |
| 17. Hans Town Association Volunteers | Stand at ease, supporting | | |
| 18. Deptford Volunteer Infantry . . | Slope arms. | | |
| 19. Loyal Westminster Light Infantry . | Order arms, 1st motion. | | |
| 20. The Hon. Artillery Company of London | " 2nd " | | |
| 21. Pimlico Volunteer Association . | Unfix bayonets, 1st motion. | | |
| 22. Richmond Volunteers | " 2nd " | | |
| 23. Covent Garden Volunteers . . . | " 3rd " | | |
| 24. Three Regiments of Royal East
India Volunteers | An officer saluting. | | |
| 25. Bishopsgate Volunteers | Handle arms. | | |
| 26. Brentford Association | Ground arms, 1st motion. | | |
| 27. Fulham Association | " 2nd " | | |
| 28. St. Andrew, Holborn, and St. George the Martyr Military Association . | " 3rd " | | |
| 29. Castle Baynard Ward Association
Volunteers | Secure arms, 1st motion. | | |
| 30. Finsbury Volunteers | " 2nd " | | |
| 31. Newington, Surrey, Volunteer Association | " 3rd " | | |
| 32. Knight Volunteers | Prime and load, 1st priming motion, front rank. | | |
| 33. Volunteer Association,
Light Infantry | " 2nd " | | |
| 34. Cheap Ward Association | " 3rd " | | |
| 35. Armed Association of St. Luke,
Chelsea | " 4th " | | |
| 36. Marylebone Volunteers | " 5th " | | |

PLATE.

37. Coleman Street Military As-
St. Pancras Volunteers	Prime and load, 6th priming motion, front rank.
Cordwainers'	" 7th " "
St. Margaret and John, Minster, Volunteer Associations	" 1st loading motion. "
41. Lambeth Loyal Volunteers	" 2nd " "
42. George's, Southwark, Loyal Volunteers	" 3rd " "
43. St. Saviour's, Southwark, Association	" 4th " "
44. Olave's, Southwark, Volunteers	" 5th " "
45. Poplar Volunteers	" " "
46. Sadler's Sharpshooters	A Light Infantry Man defending himself with Sadler's patent gun and long, cutting bayonet.
47. Radcliff Volunteers	Make ready, front rank.
48. Union, Wapping, Volunteers	" " "
49. Loyal Hackney Volunteers	Fire " "
50. Bermondsey Volunteers	Front rank kneeling, make ready.
51. Loyal Volunteers, St. John's, Southwark	Present (as front rank kneeling).
52. Langbourn Ward Volunteers	Prime and load (as a centre rank).
53. George's, Hanover Square, Armed Association	Make ready (as a centre rank).
54. Sepulchre (Middlesex) Volunteers	Present " "
55. Farringdon Ward Within Volunteers	Prime and load (as a rear rank).
56. Aldgate Ward Association	Make ready " "
57. Walbrook Ward Association	Present " "
58. Association	Advance arms.
59. Royal Grenadiers	" 4th motion.
60. Ward Volunteers	Shoulder arms, from advance 1st motion.
61. Vintry Ward Volunteers	Club arms, 1st motion.
62. Ward Volunteers	" 2nd " "
63. St. Catherine's	" 3rd " "
64. Farringdon Ward (Without) Volunteers	" 4th " "
65. Bridge Ward Association	1st motion.
66. Tower Ward	" " "
67. Christ Church (Surrey) Association	" 3rd " "
68. Loyal Bermondsey Volunteers	Present arms, motion from mourn arms.
69. Billingsgate Association	" " "
70. Highland Armed Association	officer.
71. The Armed Association of St. Mary, Whitechapel	Present arms, 2nd flugel motion.
72. Bank of England Volunteers, Light Infantry	Order " "
73. Candlewick Ward Association	Support arms, 1st " "
Queenbythe Ward Volunteers	A sergeant with arms advanced.

PLATE.

POSITION.

- | | |
|---|--------------------|
| 75. Ward of Cripplegate (Without) Vo- | |
| lunteers | Order arms. |
| 76. Dowgate Ward Volunteers . . . | " |
| 77. Mile End Volunteers | Pile arms. |
| 78. St. Leonard, Shoreditch, Volunteers | |
| 79. Trinity, Minories, Association . . | |

Cavalry.

1. London and Westminster Light Horse Volunteers.
2. Surrey Yeomanry.
3. Deptford Cavalry.
4. Westminster Cavalry.
5. Middlesex Cavalry. "
6. Southwark Cavalry.
7. Clerkenwell Cavalry.
8. Lambeth Loyal Cavalry.
9. Loyal Islington Volunteer Cavalry.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

LONDON: PRINTED BY
AND CO., NEWCASTLE SQUARE
AND PARLIAMENT STREET

